Death of Christian Long at Shippensburg.

From the Harrisburg Independent, Saturday The following dispatch, received this morning at the Stor-Ladependent office, explains

SHIPPERSHIPS, Pa., Jan. 16, 1802 Christian Long, esq., died at his home this morning, at 1.20. He will be buried on Mon-day, the 18th, at 1 o'clock p. m., from his J. C. HUMBERL.

into and through the state, among politicians, lawyers, legislators, civil engineers, newspaper men, and that wast number of people who are expecting something "to urn up" the announcement of the death of Christian Long, of Cumberland county, will create intense interest. He was as well known as any man in the state, while he made no seeming effort to attract attention from any body. He began life in the Cumberland Valley, first as a revivalist, a sort of local exhorter, in which capacity he was as sincere as are the class of men who adopt such a course to "get along," and from this he went into the clock business when the famous "Yankee" or wooden clocks were first introduced as an article of commerce. A controlling characteristic of Mr. Long's personal organization consisted of his activipeddler, while the volubility in the use of language, which he acquired as an exhorter, gave him rare advantages as a talker in selling his goods. He was in his day credited the peddler drave to the farm house where of an officer for collection. he succeeded in selling another to the wife of the sturdy yeoman.
