Message to Congress

President Harrison sent a special message to Congress Monday on the Chilian situation, accompanied by all the correspond-

The reception and reading of the mersage were accompanied by the most impressive cene that has been witnessed in either eranch of Congress for many years. The galleries were packed with spectators, but absolute and almost painful silence prevailed during the reading of the document. The almost universal opinion is that a more able, dignified and conrageous presentation of the case could not have been made. While the letermined attitude of the administration was clearly defined, there was not the slightest evidence of buncombe or jingoism. Of subject, but one or two criticised the message adversely. Jerry Simpson was one of these. He characterized the documents as the brief of a pettifogging lawyer. His criticism brought upon him the contempt of his colleagues, one of whom said that Simpson had neither socks nor sense."

Contrary to the expectation of some of the belligerents the message did not create a warlike spirit. While its terms point unmistakably to Chili being compelled to take steps toward making reparation, they do not indicate that war will be necessary to that end. There is more earnest talk of arbitration this evening than ever before, and it is believed that Chill will make the proposition, if she does not conclude to cut matters short by complying with the terms of the last note from the President, presented last Saturday.
