Scrofula
Is more especially than any other a hereditary disease, and for this simple reason: Arising from impure and insufficient blood, the disease locates itself in the lymphatics, which are composed of white tissues, and therefore the unborn child is especially susceptible to this dreadful disease. But there is a potent remedy for scrofula, whether hereditary or acquired. It is Hood's Sarsaparilla, which expels every trace of the disease and gives to the blood the quality and color of health. Get Hood's.
Hood's Sarsaparilla
"When my boy was two years old he was attacked and suffered a long time with scrofula sores. The physician at length told us to give him Hood's Sarsaparilla, which we did. Two bottles cured him. He is now 10 years old and has not had any sign of scrofula since. We recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all our friends." MRS. E. C. CLIPPER, 8 Kidder St., Cleveland, O.

THE SWINGING GATE.

The twilight is full of sadness
And the wind, in coat of gray,
Skulks like a wolf thro' the shadows
And will not be scared away.

Down at the foot of the garden
The gate is swinging slow,
As if invisible footsteps
Were passing to and fro.

And it seems to me, in my musing,
They are feet of my coming fate,
That will find their way to my threshold
And pass it like the gate.

Oh, say, do you bring good tidings,
Ye unseen messengers?
Or is it sorrow and boding
Of future griefs and cares?

The gate swings slowly, slowly,
And the shutters creak and start;
I sit in the glowing lamp light,
But a shadow fills my heart.

A SACRIFICE.

BY W. I. R.

The fire burnt low in the grate, but the little light it gave revealed all the grace of Mrs. Wingfield's slight form, in its close-fitting robes of black.

To-night, for the first time in her two years of widowhood, she laid off the widow's cap, which had for so long served to conceal the thick auburn braids so artistically coiled about the small head.

Perhaps for this same reason she had dismissed the butler, when he entered, according to custom, to light the lamps, or, perhaps, the slow ticking of the clock upon the mantel revealed to her sufficiently the lapse of time, without compelling her to distinguish the hands upon the face of the dial, drawing nearer and nearer the hour whose close approach dissipated the calmness she vainly strove to gain.

Eighteen years had passed since she and Arthur Griffith had met. They had been lovers in that far-off time, but he was poor then, with no whisper in the air of rich inheritance to which he afterwards fell heir, just too late for it to bring happiness to either.

Not that they cared for wealth, either of them, but then there were older, and perhaps wiser minds to judge for both, and so, each vowing eternal vows, they were torn apart forever.

Six short months later she married Edward Wingfield. He was fortunately, not the man to look for love and sentiment in his young wife—only wifely duty and obedience.

In these she never failed him, and after his death the world found proof of his esteem in the fact that to his widow reverted all his fortune, untrammeled by a single reservation.

She had married very young; she was but thirty-five now. Would he find her changed, she wondered—he for whose coming she waited here to-night?

Simultaneously with the thought came the sound of carriage wheels and horses' hoofs on the graveled walk.

She started to her feet, pressing both hands upon her fast beating heart. Only that morning she had received the telegram announcing Arthur Griffith's coming, and already he was there.

She was glad, oh, so glad, that the room was dark when she heard the quick, firm tread she had sometimes heard in her dreams during these long years of dutiful living; so glad that he could not see the quick blush, which put her matronhood to shame, when the door was thrown hastily open, and an instant more brought him to her side.

"Alice!"

Oh, how his voice thrilled her—half with pleasure, half with pain!

His tall form towered far above her as in the olden time; but he held fast in his own firm, tender grasp her two little, trembling hands.

"Are yoo glad to see me?" he asked.

She strove to answer, but her lips quivered, and no words came.

"Alice," he said then again, and he bowed his head lower, "Is it too soon to speak?"

"Oh, Arthur," she answered, "Can I yet atone?"

And then the bridge of years was swept away, and she sobbed out her happiness upon his heart.

"Let me see you, he said; at last. "I have not yet seen the face for which I have hungered all these years."

He struck a light, and then turned and looked at her.

"My darling!" he said. "It is still my beautiful Alice! What have I done to deserve this hour?"

"Mamma, where are you?" called out a fresh, girlish voice at this instant.

The next moment a young girl of scarce seventeen summers sprang into the room.

"This is my daughter, Arthur; my only child. Dora, let me present you to one of your mother's oldest friends."

The gentleman indicated looked from one to the other—from the mother to the daughter—then back again; now he could realize the lapse of time; now he could appreciate the changes years had wrought. It was though he had brought the past and the present face to face, forcing him to acknowledge the impossibility of nature's standing still.

The daughter was a fair counterpart of the mother's beauty. As she looked now shyly, extending to him her hand, as if in deprecation of her unceremonious entrance, so had Alice looked, when extending her hand in farewell, as though she would have said, "I am forced into it by a stronger will than mine."

An uncomfortable seasation rose up in his breast; a dumb warring against the inevitable, an unacknowledged desire to retrace life's pathway and conquer time. Meantime the young girl pouted the full, red lips, as she thought her mother's friend strangely absent; and when he at last forced himself into a few words of greeting, they fell upon dull, unheeding ears.

Then she had gone. The lovers were alone again, but he no longer opened wide his arms, but instead drew a chair to her side, that they might discuss more rationally.

"You must teach Dora to love you," she said to him, next morning. "I want first to reconcile her to my second marriage before startling her with its probability. Tell me, do you think her like me?"

"Your second self, Alice."

"Oh, I am so glad! You will love her then for my sake?"

To love and be loved! An easy task set by frail woman in her blindness. It was Mr. Griffith who must be Dora's companion in her daily ride—in these early spring days.

The lovers were seldom alone now. Dora looked upon their guest as her property; she had long ago laughingly told him how unceremonious had been his welcome to her, and he had wooed and won her absolution. Sometimes Alice sighed as she watched them together, while she sat alone, but she gave to the sigh no name, and thought it a tribute to the vanished years.

One day came her wakening. Dora and Mr. Griffith had gone for their afternoon ride, but it had extended beyond its wont, and she had grown anxious and gone out to meet them, striking into the forest path, which was their favorite way.

Half a mile from her home the met Dora's horse, riderless.

Pale with terror she hastened on, when suddenly she stopped, as if rooted to the spot.

Almost at her feet knelt the man her heart had loved always, and in his arms he held Dora's unconscious form.

"My love! my life!" he said, each word being borne distinctly to her ear, "Speak to me once—just once! Oh, Dora, are you hurt? My darling, would that I might have given my life to save yours!"

Then he stooped and pressed his lips to her's. A long, fluttering sigh escaped them.

"Arthur!" she whispered, "Arthur!"

"I am here, dear," he said.

And then he laid her down out of his arms, at though, with returning life, he remembered the duty it brought with it.

The mother sprang forward.

"Do not be alarmed, Mr Griffith said, gently, on seeing her. "Her horse threw her off; I think there is no serious injury!"

No serious injury! None to Dora, but Alice knew that her wound was past healing.

When, a few hours later, they knew that there was no need of anxiety on her account, Alice shut herself up within her own room to fight her battle.

"I cannot give him up," she moaned. He does not know his own heart. He will forget this child—and she cannot love him."

But even as she reasoned came the remembrance of the one word "Arthur," and the tone in which she had spoken.

"I will try her," she said; and for the first time in her life came a feeling of bitter resentment, even against her child. They were sitting together in the library when she entered.

"Arthur," she said; I think it is time that we told Dora the truth."

The man's face paled. She could almost see him gird his soul for the conflict, and crush out his heart behind his honor.

Even Dora looked up with a suspicion of coming trouble.

"It is only this, dear," Alice said, turning to her daugher. "Has not Mr. Griffith told you that he was an engaged man?" Then she saw that the steel had struck home. The child answered nothing as she turned two wet, reproachful eyes to him, who dared not meet their gaze. Until this instant she had not known that she possessed a heart. She learned it now, to her cruel cost.

"I must congratulate Mr Griffith, she said, calling up all her woman's pride to her aid, then hastened from the room to hide the burst of tears.

The two were left alone.

"Does she suspect, do you think?" she asked, gloating over his torture.

"She must know," he answered, "I am ready, Alice, to fulfill my bond. Let there be no further delay."

"Will you not, then, plead that I asked only the pound of flesh, without a drop of blood, and that your life must pay the forfeit I demand?"

What can you mean?" he asked in a bewildered way.

"Only," she said, "that I plead my cause for yours. Please me, Arthur, I find I cannot marry you.

Two minutes ago she would have thought herself incapable of the sacrifice; yet here she stood, quiet and calm, giving no outward sign of the inward whirlpool, nor the torture that wrung her as she watched the weight lift from his soul at her words?

"You no longer love me?" he questioned.

"I am growing old," with a mocking laugh: And in his blindness he accepted her words as denial, and went forth content, little dreaming of the sacrifice the mother had made for her daughter's happiness.

A little later he came to her, Dora, blushing, radiant with happiness, by his side.

"Will you give her to me?" he asked, "I loved her, Alice, because she was your second self.

This is Meant for You.

It has been truly said that half the world does not know how the other half lives. Comparatively few of us have perfect health, owing to the impure condition of our blood. But we rub along from day to day, with scarcely a thought, unless forced to our attention, of the taousands all about us who are suffering from scrofula, salt rheum and other serious blood disorders, and whose agonies can only be imagined. The marked success of Hood's Sarsaparilla for these troubles, as shown in our advertising columns frequently, certainly seems to justify urging the use of this excellent medicine by all who know that their blood is disordered. Every claim in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla is fully backed up by what the medicine has done and is still doing, and when its proprietors urge its merits and its use upon all who suffer from impure blood, in great or small degrees, they certainly mean to include you.

Virtually a Life Sentence.

FRANKLIN, Pa., Jan. 31.—The last act in the sensational trial of H. H. Winans for burglary was brought to a close yesterday when Judge Taylor sentenced the prisoner to five years in the penitentiary. The Judge said he had originally intended to make the sentence eight years, but considering the prisoner's extreme age, 88 years, and also the fact that mercy had been recommended by the jury, he would make it five. It is thought he will hardly survive his term.

Winans was greatly affected, and all pitied the prisoner as he was taken out of the room. He had lived a dual life for years.

THE STATE CONVENTION

Will Be Held in Harrisburg, April 20.

PHILADELPHIA, January 29.—The meeting of the Republican State Committee opened at the Continental Hotel this morning, with Chairman Watres presiding.

The members of the committee lost no time in getting down to the principal business of the day, that of fixing the time and place for the holding of the State Convention.

After the session had lasted an hour it was announced that Harrisburg had been selected as the place, and that the convention would be held on April 20.

Samuel Benson, of Cumberland, attempted to place in nomination the name of Joseph Sadler for the vacant Supreme Court Judgeship, but was not recognized.

A resolution commending President Harrison's ability in handling the Chilian dispute was unanimously passed, with another thanking Chairman Watres for his services in the last campaign.

It was decided that the question of filling the vacancy in the National Committee, caused by the resignation of Senator Quay, be left to the delegates to the National Convention.

The meeting was harmonious, and was well attended.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. J. N. Snyder, Druggist.

Chill Brought to Terms.

From the Chicago Inter Ocean.

The firm and dignified position taken by President Harrison on the Chilian difficulty has had the desired effect, or at least is in a fair way to bring about a complete and amicable settlement on a basis satisfactory to American patriotism. It is another evidence that the surest way for the United States to secure respect for its flag is for our own government to show proper spirit in resenting indignities offered to it. It took precisely such a vigorous assertion of National honor as the President's message of Monday to bring about a condition of things justifying him in supplementing it, as he did Thursday, with another message to the effect that there would probably be no need of Congressional action in the premises, Chili having come to terms, or at least shown a satisfactory disposition to fully concede our entire demand.

First of all the offensive Matta note was "withdrawn with acceptable expressions of regret;" second, the request for the recall of Minister Egan was also withdrawn. Thus the Baltimore incident alone is left to be dealt with, and as to that the President informs Congress that the treatment is so conciliatory and friendly that he is of the opinion that "there is good prospect that the difference growing out of that serious affair can now be adjusted upon terms satisfactory to this government by the usual methods and without special power from Congress." This does not imply that the President has any idea of compromise or concession. The United States has demanded nothing unreasonable and should stand squarely up for the dignity of the National flag, making the sequel such that henceforth the Chilians will not dare to deny to American sailors or citizens any right or privilege accorded to Englishmen or anybody else.

The President gives exact details as to dates, and in that way completely refutes the base and cowardly insinuations of Congressman Breckinridge, without making any allusion to him or his dastardly resolution or speech. He concludes with a passage which is a superb summing up of the case as it now stands, his words being as follows:

The turn in the affair is very gratifying to me, as I am sure it will be to the Congress and to our people. The general support of the efforts of the executive to enforce the just rights of the Nation in this matter has given an instructive and useful illustration of the unity and patriotism of our people. Should it be necessary, I will again communicate with Congress on the subject.

It is only remotely possible that Chili will pursue a course requiring the President to make a second appeal to Congress. Having called from the President a message which was a semi-declaration of war, the Chilian Government found that it was dealing with a government which would defend its flag, if necessary, no matter what the cost might be, and it will hardly dare go
