SINCE THOU HAST GONE.

Since thou hast gone, My life to me has little worth, Vanished are all the joys of earth, The world is but a dismal dearth. Since then hast gone.

Since thou hast cone, My eyes are full of unshed tears, The weery months pass into years And nought care I for joys and fears, Since thou has gone.

Since thou hast gone. The sun shines ever 'neath a cloud, My fairest hopes wear funeral shroud, I am a hermit in the crowd, Stuce thou hast gone.

Since then hast gone, The rooms I love are clothed in gloom, Which on with beauty did lifeme; And now I weep beside thy tomb, stuce thou hast gone. Since thun hast gone. All woman's loveliness is nought,

Since thou has gone Since than hast gone, I too, have longed to be at rest; The very books thou hast caressed Lie ever closed upon my breast,

Since thou hast gone. Since thou hast gone, I neither strive to do or dare The labors which we once did share in happier days. Why should I care.

Since then hast gone, Since they hast gone, Life seems to me so dark and drear, I wunder if the day is near, Or, will it be always night, my dear, Since thou hast gone?

Since thou best gone. Heaven bolds for me one perfect ray, And I can only hope and pear To meet thee there some golden day, When live is dome. -Frederick Myron Colley.
