Hard Cider and the Terror of the Cooley Name Set A Farmer Crazy. Hard cider and the terror of the Coolet name are said to have made a raving maniac out of Charles Gaigen, a Springhill Township farmer, residing near Morris Cross

Gaigen has been very much worked up over the deeds of the Cooleys, and has frequently expressed fear that he would be cobbed or murdered by them. For several weeks he has been drinking heavily of hard eider mixed with alcohol. On Sunday last be took his gun and started for the hills. saving that he was going to capture the Cooleys dead or alive. He was dissuaded from leaving his premises, however, on that day, but on Monday he escaped unnoticed, and the first heard of him was that he had shot at a man named Lyons and then plunged into a thicket yelling at the top of his voice. A posse of citizens at once organized and hunted for him day and night, occasionally getting a sight of him, but not near enough to effect his capture. Whenever he would catch a man alone he would fire his gun at him and then run to some cover.

Toesday night he suddenly appeared at his home, dragged his wife and children from their beds and drove them out into the night, saying: "Now in with the Cooleys." Mrs. Gaigen ran to the house of John Jennings, near by, and gave the glarm. Jennings went back with Mrs. Gairen to see i he could not pacify the madman. Just as he reached the front door Gaigen opened it, and pointing a double-barreled shotgun at Jennings' breast, both hammers cocked warned him to keep back. Quick as a flash Jennings ducked and made a spring for Gaigen. At the same time both barrels of the gun were discharged just over Jennings' head, doing no damage save to the trunk of a large-sized cherry tree in the yard, which was literally torn to pieces. Jennings clinched with the madman and a terrible struggle ensued, Gaigen fighting like a demon. But Jennings was too strong for him, and after a time succeeded in choking him into submission. Mrs. Gaigen had in the meantime ran to a neighbor's, and in a short time a crowd of citizins had collected and the madman was tied and locked in his room. He will be sent to Dixmont unles he shows early signs of recovery.
