A Startling Rumor.

A report from Stonycreek township says that people of that section are greatly agitated over developments that have recently been made which go to show that a cold-blooded murder was committed in the mountains.

During the years of 1885-86 a German peddler visited the eastern townships of this county every few weeks for the purpose of supplying farmers with buttons, thread, handkerchiefs, cheap jewelry, etc.

About the time the peddler disappeared a well known resident of Stonycreek, of many years' reputation, was killed in a quarrel following a neighbor of his went to peddle thread, buttons, lace, cheap jewelry, etc.

The story told by the girl in effect is that on the morning of the 11th of January, 1892, the peddler was in the woods and had not proceeded more than two or three miles when he was attacked by two men, one of whom shot him, while his companion cut his throat.
