it is really a disgrace to the people of Somerset that they are so neglectful of their own comfort in the matter of gaining access to the cemetery. Persons desiring to pay a last tribute at the grave to the memory of a departed friend are compelled to wade through mud up to their knees, and in or der to keep from falling into the mire must cling to unsteady fences for support. An expenditure of perhaps two hundred dollars would provide a substantial pavement from the Reformed church to the cemetery gates. The blame for the present condition of affairs rests upon nobody in particular, but upon the entire community. He takes his imprisonment good naturedly and says that he will have no trouble to prove an alibi at the proper time. He claims that he was at home and in bed at the time the assault on Miss Herwig is alleged to have been made. He has known that young lady ever since she was a child and says that she refused to identify him as her assailant but thought that he looked | #2-FOR ASSEMBLY. like the man.

A report from Meyersdale says that there has" replied the Chairman, "but if you maist is little or no doubt about Boyer being the guilty party, as he was seen following Miss Herwig on the road, and was observed going | mary all he removed his overalls and blouse and concealed them, together with his dinner buckahead of Miss Herwig. Samuel Critchfield has just returned from Washington, D. C., where he has taken the initiatory steps to have a patent on his invention for taking coal on engines while they are running. He is now baving a model made in this city, and an examination of which will soon be put into universal use.

The main features of this invention are represented in an elevated track alongside of the railroad on which a truck is run loaded with coal. This truck is furnished with power motor and on the approach of a train is started in the same direction, attaining a speed equal to that of the train by the time the train catches up with it. The engineer then throws out a book, catching the truck and opening a hopper, when the coal is dropped into the tender. As will be readily seen, it matters not what the rate of speed may be, the engine will be coaled the same as though it were standing still. When the hopper is empty the truck is released and

But the most important part of the invention is that relating to the loading and discharging of passengers. The same principle is applied as in taking coal. The passengers will get on a covered car and will be attached to the moving train in a similar manner. A covered platform will then be thrown out, when passengers can get on as easily as in walking from one car to another. Those who get off will be run back by the motor to the station. This feature is one that is more than likely to make an era in rapid transportation. In addition to the time saved in thus be ing able to take fuel and passengers without stopping, there is another great saving which is an important item to the railroad com panies. This is the cost of starting and stopping trains. It is said that the wear on the machinery and the extra cost of fuel in stopping and starting heavy trains amounts to as much ao $100 on a single trip between Philadelphia and Pittsburg. All this will be avoided by this method. Mr. Critchfield's invention also provides for taking water while the train is running. This is done in an elevated trough in a manper somewhat similar to that now in use by the Pennsylvania road. The importance of this part of the invention may be known when it is stated that the Pennsylvania owns the exclusive patents on the present metho of taking water between the tracks and that they will not sell to competing roads. Mr. Critchfield has filed caveats covering all the points of his inventions and is now preparing to put them in practical working
