A Trip Through the South and Over Battle Fields.

Below we publish an account of a trip through the Southern States in a letter from our old friend and former resident of Somerset Co., S. P. Sweitzer, Proprietor of the American Hotel, Comberland, Md. Mr. Sweitzer left Somerset in Jan., 1862, and served in Co. G., 19th Pa. Infantry, 14th Army Corps, Army of the Cumberland, and commanded by General Rosencranz. In his trip through the South he revisited the old hattle fields, an account of which he gives below.

by way of Pittsburgh to Cincinnati, and thence to Chattanooga, Tenn. From here we visited the battl efields of Chicamanga and Lookout Mountain, the formfearful strife that took place there during bear testimony of that contest for ages to come. It was here our friend Sweise of Somerset lost an arm and our regiment was reduced to about forty effective men. The landscape still bears a familiar resemblance, although much improvement has been made in the surroundings. Some of the old breastworks that I had helped to build still remain, monuments of scenes we hope never to be repeated. We picked up a numbor of relics, such as bullets, pieces of shell, parts of canteens and cartridge boxes, and recognized in a dilapidated building standing on the field, a house we had used as a hospital after the battle. We next visited Lookont Mountain which we ascended by means of an inclined plain which is 3300 feet long and attains an elevation of 1450 feet, the most extensive it is claimed of any in the United States. On the summit of the mountain there is quite a large summer resort, where several hotels of the most approved order are run at their fall capacity during the summer. Our accompanying artist took a number of photographs from this summit. The view being exceedingly fine, looking out from this folly perch upon the great expanse of territory can be seen one of the most beautiful landscapes over witnessed. The dark green foliage of the forest interspersed by cultivated fields and beautiful villas, with the Tennesee river flowing through the center, its bosom glistening in the sunlight and mist like a sheen of silver.

I have almost forgotten to mention that the city of Chattanooga, which was almost entirely destroyed during the war, has become a handsome city of 50,000 or more inhabitants and the center of great manufacturing industries. The old forts that we had built have all been torn down and houses and streets occupy their
