WOOL!

Nothing like the effect of the great shock has ever been known here. The shock caused a rush of air like the first breath of a mighty cyclone. Then came a series of Ten thousand pounds of washed shocks attended by a dull roaring noise like the discharge of heavy artillery at son. Hundreds rushed out of the tall buildings and hotels pale with fear. Broken glass fell about them as scores of heavy plate glass We carry the largest and best seshow windows came crashing into the streets. Not even in the heavy carthquake several months ago was the shock so terrifying. The high new office buildings swayed like pendulums, while in old structures plaster fell from walls and all moveable articles on shelves came lumbering to the
