An Ugly Customer. Dr. Perry Shafer, of this place, had an experience with a rattle snake Sunday that he does not care to repeat. The Dr. was traveling the ridge road between Somerset and Berlin, having been called to the house of John Stoenaker to dress the wounds of his ten-year-old son, who had fallen from the horse to the threshing floor of the barn the day before and sustained several severe scrap wounds. The Dr. had proceeded several hundred rods from Stoenaker's house when the snake of white poles he always drives stopped short in its tracks and positively refused to proceed, notwithstanding the Dr. applied the lash to their backs vigorously. Finally the Dr. discovered the reason for his horse's strange action. He rode ahead of them he saw a snake four and one-half feet long and as thick as his arm stretched across the road. He dismounted from his wagon as quietly as possible and secured a pole ten or fifteen feet long dispatched his muckshaper. The Dr. says he only investigated for enough to satisfy himself that the snake was a rattler and he did not wish to escape him in his retreat, so glad was he to relieve him of his presence.

$2,000 Legacy Reduced to $540. The Diocesan church of this place left a legacy thirty years ago on which they never realized until within the past few days. An April 1888, Samuel Stahl, a member of that denomination, died in this place. In his will he directed that the sum of $2,000 be invested in real estate, the interest thereon to be paid to the Elders of the Diocesan church of Somerset borough and in their absence to the trustees of the church, and reward cards for the school. They were further directed by the testator to present a Bible to every one obeying the gospel and uniting with the church. The bequest did not seem to be operative until after the death of his son, Mr. Stahl, who died in 1912. He left a son, Mr. Stahl, who died in 1912. He left a son, Mr. Stahl, who died in 1912.

Hired a Horse and Sold Him. Wednesday afternoon a young man named John Berkey visited Picking's livery stable in this place and hired a horse and buggy to drive several miles into the country. He put up the price in advance and brought the horse back to the stable in good order. The next morning he again visited the stable and hired a horse and buggy which he wanted to drive to Berlin. He did not pay in advance this time and shortly after leaving the stable returned and exchanged the open-top buggy in which he had originally started for a closed one. He failed to return to Somerset Thursday evening as he had agreed to do and Friday morning Mr. Picking began to make inquiries in regard to him. He learned that Berkey had been driving a horse and buggy through the country and was being pursued by the sheriff and his posse. He was arrested and taken to the jail at Berlin. He was released on bond and returned to Somerset. He was released on bond and returned to Somerset.

A Bold Robbery. From the Conestoga Courier. A young man of Wharton township, Pa., and a Justice of the Peace, was robbed of $241 last Friday night at the "Old Buckhorn Tree" which has stood for the last century at the junction of the Kalmeg, Somerset and Fairbairn roads on the summit of Chestnut Hill. Knox came to Uniontown on Thursday and drove about $200 from the First National Bank, but did not start home until Friday. He went to Fairbairn by rail, and thence across the mountain on foot, for safe keeping, and for fear of robbery, he placed the money in his shoes. He passed through the Cooley country and was congratulating himself that he had escaped the clutches of that notorious gang, when he arrived at the "Old Buckhorn Tree."
