When The Hair
Slight signs of falling, begin at once the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. This preparation strengthens the scalp, promotes the growth of new hair, restores the natural color to gray and faded hair, and renders it soft, pliant, and glossy.
We have no hesitation in pronouncing Ayer's Hair Vigor superior for dressing the hair, and we do this after long experience in its use. This preparation penetrates the hair, cures dandruff and all diseases of the scalp, makes rough and brittle hair soft and pliant, and prevents baldness. While it is not a dye, those who have used the Vigor say it will stimulate the roots and color, changing the color to or even black. It will not soil the pillow-case nor a pocket-handkerchief, and is always agreeable. All the dirty, greasy hair preparations should be displaced at once by Ayer's Hair Vigor, and thousands who get around with heads looking like "the fruit of a pomegranate" should try the present drug store and purchase a bottle of the Vigor.

THE WOMAN I MEAN TO BE.
Paint the woman I mean to be, Pure and sweet and calm and free; To smile and smile and smile and smile, Clasp the immortal me.
From this point I mean to be, Every line of care or doubt; 'Tis with the smile of one Who with earth's poor pain is dumb.
Paint it so, the world may see One glad woman, widely free; One who dreams no coming sorrow, One whose face no coming care,
With a love mission in its wait, In her tender arms to take Those whose hearts-beating blood and break.
Paint a woman with a face Radiant with immortal grace; Let her eyes shine like the sun When the summer has begun.
Do not let her smile or weep, Let her face a gladness keep, Let her hair be a golden glow, Let her eyes be a blue of love.
Paint a soul so high and strong It would not let itself be wrong; Let it have its freedom's day, Let it be the love of truth set free, This is the immortal me.

The Woman in Black.
An Engineer's Strange Story of a Little Moth.
Traveling recently from Chicago to New York, I found in the morning upon crawling out of my berth that the train was standing stock still. The porter told me that it had been standing thus for an hour and a half, and that he had been sleeping the sleep of the just.
"Freight train done wopped up on de track ahead," said the porter. "I reckon we don't get out 'ere under anudder hour or two."
I dressed and peeped out and saw we were alongside the platform of a country station. I took a good breakfast in the dining car and then went out to stroll up and down the platform.
Presently I went to the locomotive and stopped to admire it. There is nothing much better to look at, for that matter, than the locomotive of one of these through express trains on the great trunk lines. How it throbs as it stands, straining with pent-up power, as if impatient to leap away at the first puff of steam. This one was hissing fiercely, while the measured throb of the air pump sounded as if it might be the regular breathing of a sleeping giant.
In the cab sat the engineer alone, waiting. I stopped and gazed with him a moment about the engine. Then I offered him a cigar, which he took, with thanks and asked me to come in. I swung myself into his cab.
The engineer—a bright, pleasant-faced man, about forty years old—explained to me the uses of the numerous valves and levers about him. They were all as bright and shining as polished copper, for the engine is as proud of his shining ornaments as a woman of the neatness of her dressing. I glanced at the two shining steam-gauges with the clock between them, and then I noticed what seemed to be an ordinary white moth, mounted in a gilt frame, hanging against the wall of the cab.
"Is that for ornament?" I asked, pointing at the moth.
The engineer smiled. "Well, partly for ornament," he said. "But a good deal more for sentiment. I put that moth there because it saved my life and the lives of two hundred and fifty people as well."
"How in the world could an insect save human lives?" I asked.
"Well, I'll tell you, if you want to hear the story. I reckon there's time enough before we get to New York for that."
I settled myself in the absent fireman's seat, and prepared to listen.
"It wasn't such a long time ago," said the engineer, "only a year ago last spring. I was running this very train, and had this engine—same fellow I've got now. You can see him over there, leaning up against the telegraph office."
"Jim is a good boy, but he is very superstitious; believes in ghosts, dreams and warnings. I used to laugh at his fancies, but I don't make as much fun of him as I did—not since we saw the woman in black."
"We were scheduled to leave M— about one o'clock in the morning, and to arrive in S— at about six. On the night when this thing took place a fearful storm of wind and rain had been raging since early evening, and was at the height of its fury when I started for the round-house.
"It was about midnight, and the wind seemed to sweep clear around and into the building. It was terribly dismal. Jim was there, and the engine was all ready, so, after getting my working clothes on, I ran the machine down to station. Our train, the vestibule limited, was an hour late. I gave the engine a thorough oiling, and made sure that all was in order.
"As we sat in the cab we could hear the storm raging outside, while the rain, driven by the gusts of wind, beat fiercely against the windows.
"It's going to be a bad run," Frank, Jim said. "I wish we were in S—, safe and sound."
"Oh," said he, "I just feel creepy somehow. Seems like there's something terrible going to happen. I can feel it in my bones."
"I laughed again. 'You got a little wet coming over, I guess, Jim,' said I. 'And the sound of the wind isn't very encouraging, that's a fact.'
"To tell the truth I was a little nervous myself, notwithstanding my easy way of treating Jim's notions.
"Presently our train came in, long and heavy, consisting mainly of sleepers. It used to make me nervous to know that the lives of hundreds of my fellow men were in my keeping, but now I think nothing of it. That night I was nervous. What if the frightful storm had made a switchman careless, or if a rail had been loosened by the setting of the track somewhere? On the last train a man must rely on the vigilance of the employe; for, in order to make schedule time he must run at such a speed that often he cannot see a signal before he is upon it.
"But I laughed at myself for my fears as I backed down and coupled to the train. I set the brakes and found everything in good order.
"By and by the little gong above my head clanged sharply, and with a puff and a hiss of escaping steam we were off into the night and storm, rattling over switches past night lights and between long lines of cars, till, with a roar and rumble, we rushed over the long iron bridge and away through the hills, waking their slumbering echoes with our shrill whistle.

"Then I pulled the throttle wide open, and the clank and roar soon settled into a hum, for old it was doing her best and we were making fifty miles an hour.
"The darkness was intense, save where the headlights, an electrical device, cast its hot fire of light into the gloom. Jim had a funnel of light, and kept steam up to a high pressure, so that we fairly flew on top sleeping hamlets and still farmhouses.
"At our first water station I made sure that all was working smoothly, while Jim inspected the headlights. The operator handed the orders, which showed that the road was clear as far as our next stopping place. As we went,
"The darkness grew more intense, if possible, while the wind shrieked. The rain became more blinding, till nothing could be distinguished in the gray mark which enveloped us.
"Suddenly, through the mist and rain, I saw, looming right before me, the gigantic figure of a woman wrapped in a long, black mantle, which seemed to flutter in the wind. She waved great spectral arms about in swift, twisting movements. As I sat looking in horror, the figure vanished with a final wave of her arms.
"I was too much astounded and stupefied to make a move of my hand toward the throttle. At that moment Jim had been bending over the fire. As he looked up he exclaimed:
"Hello, Frank, what's up? You look as if you had seen a ghost."
"I sat looking in horror, the figure vanished with a final wave of her arms.
