CHILDREN
Are always liable to sudden and severe colds, to croup, sore throat, hoarse voice, etc. Remedies to be effective, must be administered without delay. Nothing is better adapted for such emergencies than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It soothes the inflamed membrane, promotes expectoration, relieves coughing and hoarseness. The prompt use of this medicine has saved unnumberable lives, both of young children and adults.
"One of my children had croup. The case was attended by my physician, and was supposed to be well under control. One night I was startled by the child's loud breathing, and on going to it found it
Strangling.
It had nearly ceased to breathe. Realizing that the child's alarming condition had become desperate in spite of the medicine it had taken, I resorted to such remedies as were of no avail. Having a part of a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house, I gave the child three doses, at short intervals, and actually waited results. From the moment the first dose was given, the child's breathing grew easier, and in a short time it was sleeping quietly and breathing naturally. The child is alive and well today, and I do not hesitate to say that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved its life."—C. A. Woodbridge, Waltham, Mass.
"For colds, coughs, bronchitis, asthma, and all the ailments of the respiratory tract."
Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Wait and Hope.
"Go away without seeing her! And why?"
"Oh," faltered Milly, letting the reins drop, "she's so unhappy! She's going to be married to a very rich man—Doctor Darrow, from New York."
"Wear a poor, you know, and all that money that papa invested in the Grand Techeconomy Bank is gone, and Moore's Cliff is all falling to ruin, and Moore's cried three days and three nights, and so Ethel said 'Yes.' But oh, she is so miserable! And if you come back, Jim, the old love will burn up again in her heart; for she does love you, Jim—she told me so. She has loved you ever since that time you exchanged rings at Saratoga; and she has got the little blue ring still. And she hates the very idea of marrying Doctor Darrow—only mamma's made her feel that it was her duty. Oh, don't do so stern and white at me, Jim—dear Jim! It's a dreadful thing to hear you tell me, but I think you ought to know. Please, please don't ever let mamma or Ethel know that I said this to you! But if you could make them believe you were engaged to somebody else—a business matter, you know, and I'll tell you, with a sudden flash of shame dying in her cheek, "I then think Ethel might like to be happy with the New York man."
"Engaged to somebody else, eh?" said this unknown confidant. "But to whom? To yourself for example?"
"Yes. Why not?" said Milly, with the utmost gravity. "Merely as a business matter." "Why, the child's own down plump in the north chamber last night," exclaimed Ethel, standing in the doorway, with the mop in one hand and a pail of water in the other. "Look exactly as if there'd been an avalanche of lime dust there. Guess it was the rain doing it. I've known that ruff was leaky the two weeks while Aida's mother was in jail, but the back stairs ain't safe no longer. There's one step gone and the balusters loose. And cook says she's that nervous she can't stay in the house, with the loose bricks tumbling down the kitchen chimney every time the wind raises a bit."
Mrs. Moore sighed. She was a handsome, high-shouldered woman with dark eyes and a shabby-genteel silk wrapper worn at the elbows.
"Never mind, Betsy," said she. "I'll all be right, once Miss Ethel is married. Doctor I arrow in a man of wealth. He will rebuild the old Moore homestead for us."
"Well," muttered Betsy, "it's a good thing the world's not wiser, or there wouldn't be no house left to rebuild."
At the same moment a pretty young gipsy of sixteen was rushing frantically into one of the great, sparsely furnished bedrooms with a pasteboard box in her hand.
Overhead plump little plaster Cupids swung garlands of flowers from the crack of the door, and a faded rag supplied the place of carpet, and the merry sunshine played hide and seek with the worn places in the yellow-dark curtains, and a beautiful young girl sat at a rhenium writing desk, with her chin supported in her hands and her sea blue eyes fixed dreamily on space.
Ethel looked at her's another box come by express," screamed the young sister, breathless with rapture. "It comes the veil! Do open it and look. Do, Ethel, please. Oh, I never saw a wedding veil before in all my life, and I do so want to see what it is like!"
"You can open it," said she, without a change of posture.
"Well, I declare," said Milly. "Any one would think I was the bride. Well, here goes! Oh, oh! isn't it beautiful!"
Ethel leaned forward a little and scrutinized the delicate folds of lace more closely.
"Yes," she said, indifferently, "it's pretty enough. But it's the wrong pattern; it don't match the boucans and the jacket."
"It must go back at once!" cried Milly. "Only three days now, and the wrong pattern of lace! What are people thinking of!"
"Oh, let it stay," listlessly uttered Ethel. "What difference does it make whether it one pattern or another."
"What difference?" Millicent looked hard at her sister. "Oh, Ethel! I'm so sorry Cousin Jim is coming to the wedding!"
Ethel Moore colored an intense scarlet.
"Sorry—sorry that our own cousin is to be here on the occasion of my marriage?"
"No—no," hesitated Millicent—"not that. But it sets you to thinking of him. He is so very handsome, Ethel. He is handsome than Doctor Darrow. You're such a funny girl, or you would have photographs of both of them. But there comes the pony, and I must make haste, or I shall lose the down express train, for the veil."
Mike, the errand boy, was promptly deposited from his place in the battered little village cart, and Miss Milly jumped in, took the box in her lap, and whipping the pony briskly up, drove away as fast as she could.
"Just in time for the express!" she cried. "And now I may as well wait for the train. There may be some one that I know of it."
"I beg your pardon," said a pleasant deep-toned voice, "but can you tell me the way to Moore's Cliff?"
Milly turned, and saw a handsome man, with a light value in his hand.
"To Moore's Cliff?" she repeated.
"Why, I am Millicent Moore, and I'm going straight there. I think—you must be—Jim!"
"That is my name," he answered brightly. "And you are little Milly of course."
She looked gravely at him. He could almost read the sudden changes of thought in her blue, solemn eyes and varying color.
"Please get into the cart," said she. "I suppose I must take you to the Cliff, as there's no depot wagon here. But touching the plegmatic pony with her whip-lash, "I'm almost sorry you're come!"
"Sorry? Why, little Milly! And I thought we were to be such friends," he cried.
"I think perhaps I'd better tell you all about it," said she, speaking as if she had not heard his words. "No one knows it all but me and Ethel. Ethel won't be pleased, but—oh—oh, Jim, hadn't you better go away without seeing her?"
Her open sketch book lay beside her.

ATTACKED BY MOBS.
General Weaver Prevented from Speaking in Georgia.
The spirit of lawlessness evoked and fostered by the organized Democracy of the town and county of South has become so intolerant that it demands the attention of law-abiding, God-fearing people everywhere. Free speech and a fair count of the ballot are arrogantly and openly denied. Within the past few days the Southern chivalry of Georgia and the Democratic clique of Waycross, Albany and Macon resorted to violence and incited and encouraged by the Democratic press of the State, indulged in hoodlumism and vile language, and conduct that would put to shame the natives of an uncivilized community.
At Columbus a determined effort to break up a third party meeting was suppressed only because the farmers were in the majority. At all non-Democratic meetings held along the line of railroads, large crowds of thugs and rowdies from the great cities are shipped in to create riot and provoke bloodshed. At Macon the right of speech was denied to General J. B. Weaver, the Presidential nominee of the People's party and the Young Men's Democratic Club, 300 strong, proceeded to march to the meeting and aided in the disturbance and abetted the chaotic scenes in their disgraceful proceedings. Mrs. General Weaver, who accompanied her husband, and who is a prominent "white-ribbon," and lovely, Christian gentleman, was assaulted and driven from the balcony of the Hotel Lanier by rotten eggs thrown at her by the mob. The Mayor of the city was invoked in vain. The police stood with the mob and laughed and encouraged them.
A committee, consisting of the chairman of the Democratic club, Dr. Nunnally of the Presbyterian University and the Methodist pastor went and implored the mob to address the mob and quiet the demonstrators of the city of Atlanta. That the oiled of disgrace from their city, but no human voice could be heard above the roar of the Democratic wild beasts that held possession of the city all night.
At the State Capitol the disgraceful scenes of Macon were twice repeated in the presence of the Governor of Georgia, and with an organized police force powerless to interfere to prevent the riotous and unbecoming conduct. That the shedding of innocent blood might be averted General Weaver and his party left the State yesterday to resume the political campaign in North Carolina and Virginia.
The political lines in Georgia are tightly drawn by the so-called organized Democracy in the cities against the People's party of the rural population. As 75 per cent of the population of Georgia are agriculturalists it follows that they are demanding a cessation of the reign of terrorism and the suppression of lawlessness. With a fair count of the ballot this fall the death knell of Democracy will sound.
