IF I WERE A GIRL. BY NORMA RESCE.

If I were agiri, a bright, merry girl, Just entering life's great field, I'd arm mywelf for a noble fight, And, come what might, would not ;

What if a poem I never could write That would thrill with delight the soul, Or a song to charm I never could sing, Or reach any lofty goal !

Or if I were doomed to live in the shade, With none looking on to cheer! I'd live a song so sweet, so pure,

That angels would listen and hear. I would be so careful that not a note In my one song should discord make; And if the tones with tears were faint I'd still keep them true for His sake,

Whose ear would surely catch the strain, And its harmony He would see, Then 0 the joy that my heart would feel
