The day was not an ordinary day. The sun shined brightly on the water, and the birds sang sweetly.

PANSY'S PORTRAIT.
BY MARY EVELYN HALL.

The following story used to be told by an artist, "a little queer in his mind," whenever he could get a listener:

There were two young girls standing before me, arm in arm, and they were precisely alike, though one look like the dim reflection of the other seen in some blurred old mirror.

A shocking fact that some sudden affection of the brain, or at least of the eyes, had befallen me, made me for a moment forget everything else.

Mr. Cranch turned upon me roughly, and said: "You have been painting a wrong lady's portrait and refuse to let her father see it!"

Mr. Cranch gave an impatient cry, and staggered backward. I caught his arm and helped him to stand.

you know she tells us her sister, Rose, who has been dead three long years, came with her to be done, and that you see her, and paint her. You see by that how low she is!"

"I'd like to see the picture," said Mr. Cranch.

"I resolved to paint what I saw, as I stood at the window. I felt an indescribable thrill run through me. My finger tips tingled, and the tip of my tongue had that sensation which is created by touching the heart of a pineapple; a cold breeze seemed to blow over me, and my scalp turned icy cold.

"I gazed fixedly upon my sister, beholding her chair seated to arise a delicate puff of white smoke which hovered about her head. Then I saw it condense itself, and take shape. The figure I had seen twice before was leaning on the back of the chair with her hand on Pansy's shoulder. I could not but be 'seeing double' for the girl in the chair had a different attitude from the one behind it.

It Was a Good Cigar.

Ringo—Bobbie, come here. I hear that you have been smoking. (Silence from Bobbie.) Come now, answer me truthfully. Is it true that you are smoking?

Bobbie—I guess it is, sir.
Ringo—That's right. Now, my boy, don't you smoke any more really young smoke?

Bobbie—Yes, sir, but (boo boo) please don't whip me.
Ringo—(killing) I am not going to whip you. I believe when a little boy really wants to smoke he should be grateful.
