Ann is too plain and common, And Nancy sounds but ill; Yet Annie is endurable, And Anna better still. There is a grace in Charlotte, In Eleanor a state ; An elegance in Isabel, A haughtiness in Kate; And Sarah is sedate and neat, And Etien innocent and aweet,

Jane is too blunt and hold, And Marion somewhat sorrowful, And Lucy proud and cold. Amelia is too light and gay, Fit only for a flirt; And Caroline is vain and shy. And Flora smart and pert. Louisa is too flat and sleek, But Alice gentle, chaste and meek. And Harriet is confiding. And Clara grave and mild ; And Emma is affectionate, And Jaunet arch and wild. And Patience is expressive, And Grace is old and rare,

And Hannah warm and dutiful.

A Battle Strangely Won.

It was probably one of the most remurkable battles that was ever fought. The advance had been well planned by the attacking force, the idea being to surprise the enemy at the dead of night. Every dotail had been carefully considered. The advance would be hidden by a wood, and the first the enemy would know of it would be when the troops swept out of the wood and carried the camp by storm. There were appearently no pickets in the wood, and there seemed to be no possibility of a failure. The colonel in command was gloating over his expected victory, when one of his officers called his attention to a bright light some distance to the left of the advancing column.

"What is it?" asked the colonel anx-
