People Try to See Ton Much in One or Two Days-One Brawback to Jackson Park's Far-Pamed Magnincent Distances.

(Special World's Pair Letter.) The historian, when writing about the World's Columbian exposition, will be able to make but one pertinent criticism. That will refer to the magnitude of the enterprise. Even now it is being admitted that the fair is too The distances that have to be covered by visitor; are indeed "magnificent," and the average man or woman is tired long before any of the marvelous exhibits have been seen. The American people, we all know, like "big things" They want everything they undertake to be just a little "bigger" than anything ever attempted in Europe. When, therefore, the annonneement was made a few years ago that the Chicago fair was to occupy nearly six bundred acres of land and that the exhibits were to be placed in buildings larger in size than anything ever created in times, either ancient or and rest. modern, the nation seemed pleased

And all these trials are endured for the sake of trying to perform the impossible task of seeing all the fair in a few days. If persons who can stay in Chiengo but a short time would confine instead of running from one building to another they would derive mor benefit from their visit and add to their enjoyment.
