WISHES.

BY L'MILE PICKHARDY.

I asked a little child one day, A child intent on joyous play, "My little one, pray tell to me Your dearest wish; what may it be? The little one thought for awhile, Then answered with a wistful smile, "The thing that I wish most of all Is to be hig, like you, and tall." I asked a maiden sweet and fair,

Of dreamy eyes and wavy bair, "What would you wish, pray tell me That kindly fate should bring to you?" With timid mien and downcast eyes And blushes deep and gentle sighs,

Her answer came, "All else above, I'd wish some faithful heart to love." I asked a mother, tried and blest, With babe asleep upon her breast, "O mother fond, so proud and fair, What is thy inmost secret prayer ?" She raised her calm and peaceful eyes, Madonuslike, up to the skies, "My dearest wish is this," said she,

"That God may spare my child to me." Again, I asked a woman old, To whom the world seemed hard and

"Pray tell me, O thou blest in years, What are thy hopes, what are thy fears?" With folded hands and head bent low She answer made, in accents slow, "For me remains but one request-It is that God may give me rest."

SOPHIE'S SLEIGH-RIDE.

BY W. O. STODDARD.

Manoah Putman stood in the broad orch of his father's ample farm-house and looked out over the winter landscape, so very much of which belonged to his own patrimony, and a proud man was he. Proud he always was, and of all that pertained to him, including his own feet and inches, and what he deemed his other personal attractions; but just at this moment he was prouder of his big horse and his new sleigh than of anything else. Truth to tell, they were both good of their kind, and Manoah knew it. He knew, too, that almost any girl in the valley would be glad to try the first snow in that sleigh and behind that horse; that is, with him, Manoah, There had been make-believe storms, mere whims, before, but no sleighing; and now the snow had been coming down all the previous night, and had not ceased yet, though there were signs of that, and it was beginning to drift. "'Twon't be first-rate till it's packed," he said, as he took the reins and sprang in, "but I'll see what Sophie Williams 'll say to it." It was a brief and brisk little drive down the road, and then he pulled up in front of just such another farmhouse as the one he had left. Not precisely before the door, for that space was already occupied by a somewhat diminutive, if not antiquated-looking "cutter," with arching swawn-necks in front, and provided with only a black, restive-seeming 'Canada pony," that looked as if he would have been a little more than a good meal for Manoah's equine favorite. The young man could only give a glance at the ipony, however; for there on the porch stood Sophie Williams herself, almost invisible through her furs and wraps, but, for all that, nudoubtedly the prettiest, sauciest and most independent little piece of coquetry in all Cherry Brief enough was Manoah's greeting before he announced that he had come to take his fair neighbor out for a sleighride, pointing, ashe did so, the undeniable attractions of his new establishment. Sophie would have liked, it may be, give and accept. In a moment more she would have done so and sent her pony back to the barn, but Manoah's evil genius made him open his mouth. "Isn't it tiptop Sophie?" he said. That little rig that old Squire Haddam give ye ain't a primin' to it."

Sophie felt that he mentally added:

"No more'n Eph Haddam is to me," and she rejoined, a little too briskly: "No comparisons, please, Mr. Putnam; my pony is good enough for me, and I'm going to take my sleigh-ride with him to-night. You can find somebody else easy enough. "What!" said Manoah. "You don't nean to say you won't go with me?" "Yes, but I do," said Sophie. "And I won't keep you from hunting up other
