Once the Center of an Opulent Slave Jolding Aristocracy But Sold for the Price of an Ordinary Town Lot.

The irony of fate was never more strikingly exemplified than at Selma a few days since when the town site of Cahaba, once the capital of Alabama and the center of an opulent slaveholding aristocracy, was sold for taxes and bought in by Henry Freeman, an ex-slave, for five hundred and fifty dollars. On the property are a dozen or more houses, two or three brick stores being among the number, but these will be torn down.

Situated as it was at the confluence of the Cahaba and Alabama rivers, Cahaba was at one time one of the most important inland towns in the south. It is said to have been a most beautiful village. Surrounded by the beautiful and fertile plantations that lay along the banks of the stately Alabama, Cahaba was the home of the nobles of the state. Here they built their lovely dwellings in the architecture of the south of that day, with broad verandas, wide halls and a multitude of windows. Extensive grounds. surrounded each. The choicest flowers bloomed in the gardens. Magnolins onks and stately cedars fringed the entrance to the grounds. Cape jasmine and myrtle grew into trees in the flower gardens. Hundreds of do-mestic fowls scratched and elucited and crew in the poultry yards. Blooded horses neighed and pranced in and about the stables. It was ideal living these good worthies had. Speaking of their manner of living a recent newspaper writer thus discourses:

Some of the wealthier reared piles of brink after the fashion of the villas of old England, and few others yet, whose incomes were princely, dwelt in veritable palaces of stone and marble, in the midst of parks, with winding drives bordered by semi-tropleal flowers, wet with the spray of flashing fountains. Here lived the proudest families in the state, famous in the history of that day, and some of whom are yet powerful in the affairs of the new cra-the Morgans, the Craigs, the Pettuses, the Dawsons and others of greater or less celebrity. William L. Yancey's home was in Lowndes county, just across the river, and his was a familiar figure on the streets of the town. Such was Cahaba when the confedcracy was born at Montgomery, one hundred miles or so up the river. Cahaba's men went to the front to fight and her women wept at home. The capital had been removed to Tuscay loosn shortly before. In its place a tall, grim stockade was crected, it being the southernmost prison of the confederacy. The battle of Selma, a fow miles away, was the nearest that netunl war came, but nevertheless the war was a death blow to Cahaba. When the strife was over the merchants and business men restocked the empty shelves of their stores, a daily newspaper was issued and everything ossible was done to restore the old town to this former importance, but Selma, her rival, had ratiroads and a river, too, and the trades people and their cotton floated on to that city. At last, by a popular vote, the county seat d thither and a hegira noon followed. Many of the costly mansions were torn down and reconstructed in the successful city. Most of the balance were left tenantless. Year by year the population was dimini hed by death and removal until gradually the old town was deserted and finally obliterated from the face of the map by the auctioneer's hammer. A RARE MANUSCRIPT.

Copy of the Pentateuch Believed to Eight Centuries Old.

Hebrew scholars in San Francisc are very much exercised over the anthenticity of a rare document in the tunnel millionaire, says a recent dispatch to the Globe-Democrat. Sutro, when in Europe about cight years ago, bought largely Egyptian, Hebraic and Arabian doe uments and euries. These are now being overhauled by Rev. Dr. Solomon Boubin, an Orientalist who has lately arrived from Paris. In examining several antique scrolls, upon which the Pentateuch is written, Dr. Rouble accidentally stumbled upon one very dilapidated manuscript, moldy and very much impaired, that attracted his at-He discovered that the method of its scripture, the arrangement of the columns and other details, differed materially from the usuni methods which obtain in writing Hebrew scrolls.

Remembering that the great doctor. Maimonides, in his ritual codex had given variance from the regular ordinance governing the writing of scrolls, Dr. Roubin compared the discovered manuscript with the rabbi's codex and found that the document agreed in every particular with the rules laid lifting a square stone of three hundred down by the Egyptian sage. This least eight centuries old. It is made of innned goatskin and is much damaged. Sutro, in order to confirm the opinions of his librarian, called a meeting of Hebrew scholars at the library and after discussion it was decided to photograph the manuscript and send copies to the leading archaeologists of Europe. The worst that can be said against its genuineness is that it was died the British museum and many other large libraries with spurious Hebrew and Greek manuscipts, but as genuine this may not have been manufactured.
