PUSHING TRADE IN AMERICA. Many Tricks Resorted to by Europea Dealers in Wines and Liquors. There is a trick in the champagne, and in fact in all wine and lienor trades, known as "pushing," A French house which easts envious eyes on the

*merican market has to "push" its wine to get it sold here. The agent resort to all manner of expedients to cell their wine. They give prizes to head bartenders, stewards, etc. They create a fictitions demand by asking for a certain brand in hotels and res faurents where that particular brand have ceased, however, to be a statterer, is not in stock. They employ their | thanks to observing the following rules: men to "make the rounds" and do the same thing. When they are with a ling the lungs. crowd they order their own brand, pay for it and make the rest of the party Grink it. Then, of course, the next man who orders calls for the same wine. This "pushing" of wines makes it impossible to judge of the American taste for any one particular cham-pague. One brand may be "pashed" o demand one year and allowed to fall from grace in the next. The idea. according to the New York Tribune, is to spend a great deal of money one year in getting a wine before the publie and then to make a large profit on succeeding years. It is living on one's reputation. So that if the sale of a few brands increases from year to year that is not a fair estimate from which | earrings by men has been by no means to draw conclusions, and the same holds true if the sile of a few brands locreases. But when we take twentythree American agents and compare their sales for two years we get a good idea of the whole trade in this country. Outside of those twenty-three houses all other agents in this country owner of a magnificent pair of pearl brought here in 1892 only 2,866 cases. Last year "all other agents" imported 0.007. The imports for 1800 of twentythree agents and all others were 250,-OM cases, but last year they fell off to 278,500. This is a decrease of 78,100 cases, representing wine which would cost the consumer over $3,000,000. But a consumption of 278,500 cases, most people will say who have not the financial taste for champagne, is a very
