DEATH'S HARVEST.

JESSE MOORE Jesse Moore, born at Lavansville, Somerset county, Pa., Dec. 19, 1806, died in Middlecreek township, near Trent, July ters. One brother died in childhood; Philip died last December, in Washington county, Ohio. Annie Moore died ten years ago, aged about 84 years; Rebecca Kooser as eighty some years old, and Catharine Gross, who died five or six years ago, was 87. Charlotte Barron, mother of W. H. Barron, is still living, being about 84 years old, and Mary Whipkey, who is about 80 years old, also still lives, both residing in Middlecreek township. Mr. Moore was twice married, first to Adaline Lavan, who died forty-six en, of the same place, was in the infield; years ago, then to Nancy Sutton, who died about fourteen years ago. Of the second marriage there was no issue, but there were five children of the first, all living, being Levina Barron, Amanda Tedrow, Philip Moore, Alexander Moore and Angelina Weimer, at whose house Mr. Moore died. He was a member of the Disciple church, having united with that body soon after the organization of the Laurel Hill Church in the Scott-Morrison school house by Channey Forward in 1834, which church united with the Turkeyfoot church in forming the Centerville church in 1872 under Edward Bevins. The leading characteristics of Mr. Moore's life were helpfulness to dependent neighbors and advocacy of public school interests. He was buried last Friday at the Barron church, by his pastor, Rev.
