

ON THE BATTLEFIELD.

The sun rose over the field of wheat... And dawned the light of an early spring.

A BIT OF NEWS.

Write for the Times! Do you imagine you went to college for that? You can't write.

No. But I know you couldn't. I dare say you've been counting on doing this, eh?

Some manner she escapes when threatened with discovery by personating Mrs. H. — a prominent woman of well known rapid proclivities, and she charges to her account, and — and she goes a little too far for safety in that escape.

And darkened the shadows. Well, that's what we want, and you have hit it the first time. Only, if we could give the name of the woman who did it, or those of her relatives, it would be stronger. Don't know it, eh?

Well the name of the woman she personated is enough for one scoop, and we've got that. Perhaps others may know it, and it will set them to talking.

He took up his blue pencil and wrote "N. G." at the top of the page.

"Perhaps you will make a newspaper man, after all, in spite of your college education. Who knows?"

George Stanton seized the manuscript and hurried on with it to the editorial den, where he deposited it gleefully upon the top of a pile of papers on the editor's desk.

After that dinner, the theatre, supper, followed in succession, and at midnight he tried to possess himself with patience to await the arrival of the paper which would contain his maiden effort in journalism.

An overwhelming disappointment awaited him, for when he unfolded the sheet he found that his production had not been printed.

He hastened to his uncle's office, for although it was Sunday morning, he knew he should find him there.

"My article has been omitted," he announced.

His uncle surveyed the crestfallen countenance before him.

"Omitted? I haven't had time to glance at the paper yet—there's so much of it, but here it is possible."

"It is, though. Here is the paper. Look for yourself."

The proprietor glanced hastily over the sheet.

"I never knew you to do such a thing before in all the seventeen years he has been on the paper."

"Where is he?"

"Home, I suppose. I haven't seen him. Ring up the porter and find out."

The man reported that Mr. Bacon had been in his office all night, "walking up and down sort of strange like. I nixed him now and then, but he said no, kinder absent minded like, and went on walking up and down."

Frederick Stanton dismissed the man. His words had deepened the mystery.

"I can't understand this at all. Come, George; we will find out what it means."

At the door of the editorial office a haggard face confronted them. Mr. Bacon silently ushered in his visitors and closed the door.

"I sent you some stuff last night, Bacon," said Frederick Stanton, "and I've come to hear your explanation—if you can give one—as to why you kept it back."

The man addressed began to pace the room nervously.

"It was about a woman," he said finally.

"Well, what name?" demanded his superior. "Her name was not mentioned, though it ought to have been, and if it had been it is that reason why you should scruple to publish what I sent in. You have never hesitated before about such a trifle as a woman's reputation."

"There was an ominous pause."

"We may as well understand one another first as last," the speaker continued. "It will never do for an editor to doubt the policy of an owner. You were asking my reason next. If you are to persist in dictating to me, we may as well sever our connection at once."

The man addressed staggered slightly. His face paled, and a hunted look came into his eyes.

"It was only a woman's reputation that was at stake," he said quietly, "but that woman was my wife!"
