When the court of common pleas for Cumberland county confirms the report of the viewers to condemn the piers and site of the South Penn bridge over the Susquehanna river at Harrisburg, the Cumberland Valley Railroad company will have a grip on the South Penn which nothing can shake; in fact it will practically own all the road that has been built between Mt. Dallas and Harrisburg; and having possession of the Harrisburg terminus, which is the head, and all that part of the trank which lies in Fulton and need not trouble itself about the tail, which is lying in a somewhat damaged gain of eight-tenths of one point. The condition across the main range of the Alleghenies. This disjointed section of the road will probably never be of any use to any company. The Pittsburg division of the Baltimore and Ohlo runs parallel with it and has control of all the local branches which could possibly afford any business, The eastern division of the South Penn which the Cumberland Valley is incorporating into its own system, by the easy and cheap process of condemnation, will be the main outlet for the West Virginia exal region as well as the Cumberland and Broad Top coal regions. The coal trains which were expected to come down the mythical Baltimore and Cumberland road to Hagerstown, will take this route to the east, and will not come within fifteen miles of this city, even if connec tion is made with the Cumberland Valley road at Richmond Furnace. A Butler, Pa, special of October 7, says: A town has sprung up twelve miles from here within a few days. Its name is Coopertown and the oil fever rages there as badly as it ever did in the first palmy days of the gushers. When September began 200 people dwelt there. To-day there are more than 600. Nearly 100 oil derricks dot the fields within a radius of half a mile, all of which have gone up recently. A month ago there was noth ing at Cooperstown but a few straggling houses. Now there are two livery stables, with another one coming, three hardware stores, ten boarding houses, three general stores, five barber s hops three billiard and pool rooms, five restaurants, one shoemaker's shop, four meat to be had only at Mrs. Coffcoth's, and best markets, one wagonmaker, two black-
