ONE TEAR THE LESS.

fyou have caused one tear the less

Down sorrow's cheek to flow;

If you have caused one smile the more

Then, friend, you have not lived in vain,

Parough learning's walks, or labor's paths,

You still have this bright thought to cheer,

That you have caused one smile the more,

'Tis sweet to have the things we prize,

The Graefons Powers have sent;

May help, through seas of care and woo

When those brave men who stationed are

If they but save from death's rold grasp

One half-drowned, shipwreeked man

On any face to glow;

For whereso'er you stray

Or trouble's tangled way,

This memory to bless,

And one sad tear the less,

And sweet to be content

But sweeter for to feel and know

That kindly word or deed

Some soul in direct need,

Put out, at peril of their lives,

On many a rock-bound shore

Where billows rage and your-

They feel repuid for all their toil,

And all the risk they ran.

Rendered with loving care,

Can save one sad and sinking heart

If we but cause one smile the more

And one sad tour-drop less, fore number two comes along.

Secrets of the Kitchen.

The walter earries his order to a mart who is known as the "dummy-man" and quietly repeats it to him. The dunmy-man takes down on a slip the number of the waiter, the time the order was given and the items of it. All this is shortward, but not the shorthand written by the giddy young thing who chews gum and can't read her notes. The dummy-man is inventor and patentee of a shorthand of his own which has its advantages even if it does make an order look like a Chinese laundry ticket. For instance, two short horizontal lines stand for a sirloin teak. If there is a little circle just above the lines it means that the man who gave the order is not going to call on his flancee and will take onions on his steak. If the circle stands at the end of the lines it means he wants mushrooms.
