Schenk Thomas, the justice of the peace at Harris Creek, Allegan county, disposed of a peculiar case Tuesday, says the Grand Rapids Press. The story seems improbable, and is yet said to be true in every detail. The parties to the suit were Frank Statsie, a Caledonian man of Swedish extraction, and Carl Johnson, another Swede. Statsie has lived in Calodania from early youth. When he was a boy he was fond of swimming, but was afraid to bathe in the lakes and streams in the vicinity of his village, because he had been told that there was an alligator in them that is, the alligator spent its time first in one place and then another. It was a joke, but he believed it. Every man, woman and child was aware of his credulity in this respect, but no one ever took the trouble to set him right.
