Joseph Tanski, the Polish refugee narrates many stories of the shifts to which he and his fellow exiles were compelled to resort in order to keep soul and body together. None of these is more curious and interesting than one relating to his friend, Colonel Wilk, who had been decorated by the emperor of the French for gallant service in the It was pretty tight work, and so Colo- and beans.

nel Wilk had to confess, but one day he met with a strange bit of good fortune. He had been out for a walk and was on his way home when a big Newfoundland dog came running down the street, pursued by a gang of boys and men, all armed with sticks. The dog, panting growing renovating crops is often the and terrifled, ran straight toward Colonel Wilk and took refuge between his where markets are near and land is feet. The crowd drew near with loud and excited shouts. "It is a mad dog! Kill him!" A policeman, more courageous than the mob, stepped forward. "Halt!" shouted the knight of the Legion of Honor. "The dog belongs to me. It is not mad." His resolute air and perhaps the red ribbon in his buttonhole made an impression upon the policeman. "Very well," he said, "since the dog is yours, lead him away." So said, so done. Colonel Wilk took the dog home, washed and combed it, to buy it some scraps of meat. For 25 lot, and on his way home Wilk bought a few vegetables.

All these bits-bits of meat, bones and vegetables-he put into a pot todog made a sumptuous dinner.

When He Wanted Candy and Peanut They Were Not to Be Had. Just as Mr. Stuffer was starting for the railroad station with his wife and children to take a very long journey, Mrs. Stuffer exclaimed:

"See here, John. We can never go away without some fresh broken candies No one over went on a railroad journey who didn't have a lot along." "And I," put in Miss Delia Stuffer, aged 7, "insist on some peanuts and cough drops." "That's all right, " said Stuffer. "We can buy all those things on the train. There are about ten men who spend their time marching through the cars selling fresh broken candies and cough drops. Whatever else happens to the traveler, he's never allowed to run short of those commodities." But when they boarded the train the army of peanut venders, cough drop dealers and fresh broken candy merchants was nowhere to be seen. Ordinarily the traveler was pelted with these goods until he had to buy and eat some in self defense. On this occasion, however, not a single peddler was in

"Outrageous," said Stuffer to the conductor. "Do you mean to say that the company has ceased to provide its patrons with fresh broken candies and recently reasted peanuts? What has become of the fellows who chucked apples and oranges on your lap and funny magazines and things? Is this concern run by railroad men or what?"

"Mr. Stuffer," replied the conductor, "the last time you traveled on this road you kicked because the trainboy biffed you in the eye with an apple which he wished to dispose of and made your nose bleed with a packet of cough drops which he shied at you with a little too much force. You said you'd sue the company for damages for assault and battery. The company got scared at your threats and had the boys taken

The traveler burst out into a torrent of invective. "Blame the bloated corporations!" he velled. "That's the sort of a ballad and waltz that we shall get from them until the day comes when the government will be in complete control of all the transportation interests." Then he went back to Mrs. Stuffer in the rear of the car and began some heated remarks about a millennium or something which it was understood be had sighted on the starboard offing .-New York Herald.

In writing a story there are authors who do not plan the course of events in advance because they do not know them, but they write on, certain that some ingenious complication will suggest itself-in short, the story is to write itself.

I confess I believe in and rather foilow this system, for the reason that the incidents seem more like real life where the unexpected so often happens, and where events turn up in a capricious way. However this may be, I have always found that everything depends on getting well started-that is, started with such eagerness and enthusiasm that you could sit down then and there and write on and on to the end.

Others deliberate and potter, as it were, hover on the brink, hesitating to make the plunge. The moment of departure is put off and put off, and when at last a start is made it becomes a task and a drudgery and is virtually no start at all, because it is so labored and uninspired that you feel you have not begun - "Memoirs of an Author," Percy

MINERAL MANURES.

Their Importance to the Long Cultivated oils of the Older Stat

It is a mistake to speak of most soils that have ever been fertile as being "exhausted." What is really true of such soils is that the available mineral plant food that they contain has been used up. What is left is not soluble, and but for the fact that good management of the soil may yet make it useful it might as well not be there. This can only be done gradually, setting loose a small portion each year. In the meantime to produce of scrofula and salt rheum, it never large crops more mineral fertility of kinds already in the soil must be added in soluble form for immediate use.

All heavy soils contain petash, yet potash manures may often be used with great advantage on such soils for crops that require much potash and bave little power to get it. There is very great difference in plants in this respect. Some are gross feeders and can take large amounts of mineral matter from soil where other plants that equally need the same mineral starve and die. French army, but who afterward found Clover and the grasses help to make himself obliged to live upon 60 francs | mineral manures soluble in the soil. So also do such leguminous plants as peas

The question whether farmers should use the mineral manures is one of the profit or loss which such use involves. In localities far removed from market and where land is of little value the slow method of increasing fertility by only one that can be adopted. But valuable this slow method is more expensive than any other. A market gardener uses each year more per acre of manure than would buy an acre of rich land in less favorable locality. But he can well afford to do this.

Whether a farmer can use much or little mineral fertilizer must depend on how much he can make by it. He may use very little and use it on such crops that the increased yield will not pay him. He may use large amounts and make a proportionately large profit. So long as the increased crop pays its cost

The second crop was light, the quality. Subsoil Plowing. You can purchase subsoil plows of any implement dealer. There are also attachments made that may be put on ordinary stirring plows. These generally give very good satisfaction. As to the time of year to do the work, that depends on the soil and other circumstances the same as in ordinary plowing. A correspondent of Farm, Field and Fireside says that it may be done every year or only once in two or three years as circumstances will permit. Subsoil plowing is loosening the subsoil without bringing it to the surface. Where the loosened subsoil is laid on the sarface, it is called trench plowing. Subsoiling is probably advisable on a larger variety of soils in this country than is trench plowing. On undrained soils it often is werse than useless, unless in rare cases, where there is a thin layer of compact soil above a perous soil. In heavy clay soils the effects are not permanent. In deep, loose soils the practice may do some good, but not always enough to repay the extra cost.

Taking, in addition, the number of dialects he used some so diverse from the mother tongue as to constitute a different language, Dr. Russell says that the cardinal was master of no less than 111 different languages and dialects. His German was so excellent that he was taken for a native of Germany, while his French and English were equally pure. Dr. Tholuck heard him converse in German, Arabic, Spanish, Flemish, English, Latin, Greek, Swedish and Portuguese at one of the pope's receptions, and afterward Mezzofanti gave him an original poem in Persian and left him to take a lesson in Cornish. He knew several of the American Indian languages and nearly all the dialects of India.

Extension from the ear to the mastoid cells and the brain may be the result; as in the case of Senator Conkling. The soft tissues of these shelves become much thickened by continued inflammation, nearly if not completely closing the nose, much of the time compelling breathing through the mouth, a dry throat, a laryngeal cough hourseness, or even bronchitis, through the direct inhaling into these organs of dry air and dust, instead of being sifted and moistened throught the nose. Enlarged tonsils and an occasional attack of quinsy are frequent complications in those of a scrotulous constitution. Ittakes but a moderate degree of these conditions to ruin the voice of singers and make public speaking a burden.
