cried the crowd with good-natured surprise. Charlie grinned, threw off his disappointment with a slight uplift of his shoulders, and was soon creating roars of laughter with his wit, which, by the way, was far more nimble than his legs.

There was now but one leaper left, for several had become discouraged and retired from the contest.

THE STORY OF JOHN BROWN, JR. His Stirring Account of the Struggle for Free Soil in Kansas.

The only man living to-day of the circle who, with John Brown, of Ossawatimie, struck the blow at Harper's Ferry, is Jason Brown, who resides at Passaden, Kan., and is, of old, older than was John Brown, Jr., who died recently at the age of seventy-five, at his home on Put-in-Bay Island.

The writer of this sketch had an interview with him on his Island home.

A Mechanical Tinker. To watch a tinker at his work, with soldering iron and rosin, one would little think that his hands, sphere of usefulness would ever be filled by a machine.

A Cycler Tricked a Judge. The consternation with which even the most distant approach to the appearance of censoring royalty is still rare in some parts of Europe is amusingly shown in an incident which has occurred at Copenhagen.
