A Wonder-Story of The Reign of Good

King Anselmus.

Centuries have come and gone since Anselmus reigned over the Romans. He was a good and great monarch, and he had taken for his queen the fair daughter of the king of Jerusalem. They were both loved and honored by their people and would have been perfeetly happy but for one sorrow that hovered over them like a cloud. This was that no prince had been born to inherit the throne and to comfort his

Often, as the queen walked out with attendants, she would see a little one playing in the sunshine or rolling in the sand, laughing at a bright butterfly or softly crowing over a little flower. And her heart would be filled with sadness that no baby's fingers ever wandered over her face or filled her heart with the rapture that a mother feels as she folds her little one close to her bos-

And the king, as he saw all the glories around him, would sigh that there were no pattering steps and laughing voice to make the long halls of his palace ring with childish mirth.

One day as Anselmus wandered brough his gardens, he sat down by a fountain and looked idly upon the water, dimpling in the sunlight. And as he sat he grew weary, his head fell forward npon his arms, which rested on the fountain's basin, and the king

Then a vision rose before him. He thought the day was bright, but he saw the moon shining, pale and drooping, and while he looked a little bird flew towards him. Then two lions came and stood, one on each side of the bird, and shielded it from the wind. And when the king, in surprise at this strange sight, lifted his eyes, behold, the garden seemed filled with strange animals, which all bowed down to the little bird.

Then, suddenly, the air was filled with moving wings, and Anselmus beheld birds of both gay and sombre plumage, all singing together, joyfully and sweetly. And so loud did the music grow that it awoke the king, and the vision vanished. But not so the memory of it.

Anselmus pondered long upon the wonder he had seen; and then he summoned his counsellors and courtiers and all the wise men of the land, and when the hall was filled, the king which he desires !"

"I have summoned you, my people, to hear the strange adventure that has befallen me. I can not but fear that it presages some great event in my kingdom, but whether good or evil, I must hear from my wise counsellors,1 And thereupon he related his dream. At its conclusion the wise men with-

"Rejoice, oh king!" they cried. "Hear what the vision foretells. The moon shining in the light of the sun was our queen beside our king. The little bird was but to portray a prince sorn into the land. The two beasts that sheltered it were the good and the great of the land, who will give from their plenty to support and protect their future king. The strange ani- parilla and have found renewed mals that bowed before our prince were strength, vigor and vitality in its use. emblems of the foreign nations that will yield to his power. And the sweet singing from the throats of many birds was but the sign of the rejoicings that we, your own people, will give forth to welcome our king's son.

There walked on the sand a nobleman of Anselmus's kingdom, and when he saw the whale, after it had grown light, he summoned his men to come and kill it. And as they struck at the huge sides, the princess cried out:

In clarm the men at first ran away, but summoned by their master they again set to work, and soon the princess was released from her dark prison.
