Hocking loaned $5,000 to the Mountain Electrical Manufacturing and Supply Company, of Meyersdale. The loan was secured by a mortgage and judgment bond. Later Hocking foreclosed upon the Company and realized about $2,000 from the sale of their plant. His next step, in order to protect himself, was to issue against several members of the company, who had signed the bond as individuals. One of the latter was J. G. Mognet, who was supposed to be the owner of a farm containing 142 acres in owner of a farm containing 142 acres in clearly demonstrate the fact that those Elk Lick township.
