Jennertown Lad Drowned.

Stewart, the fourteen-year-old son of lustice of the Peace David L. Wland, of Jennertown, was drowned in Quemahoning creek, between one and two o'clock Saturday afternoon, Young Wiand, and two companions, E. M. Mauror and George Arisman, were skating on Noah H. Shaffer's mill dam, when the ice gave way. Wland was swept under the solid ice and was lost, while his more fortunate companions fought their way to the bank.

Shaffer's dam is about one mile from Jenners, where the Republicans of the township were holding a primary election, Saturday afternoon, and as soon as the sad news reached that place a large rowd rushed to the scene of the drowning. Owing to the treacherous condition of the ice, it was found necessary to contruct a raft, on which Joseph Hoffman and William Kautz dragged for the body, which they finally succeeded in recovering about four o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Wiand are heart broken wer the untimely death of their eldest child, who gave every promise of a bright and nappy future. Stewart was very popular with all of his companions and his death has cast a gloom over the entire neighborhood in which he lived.

The Dr. says that when he went to the young woman's room she confided to him that she had committed an operation upon herself for the purpose of conceal ing her condition, and was fearful that to examine her and tell her if her life was in danger. The Dr. at first refused husband in conducting the store and to make an examination, but finally to appease the girl, who appeared to be in an alarming frame of mind, he did so. Dr. Mitchell says that the young woman was in need of immediate attention and that he directed her to return to her home at once or to go to a hospital, where she could secure preper treatment.

Miss Beal took the 3:42 train for Rockwood and that night was admitted to the Allegheny General Hospital, where she died on January 7th.
