TEMPERED.

When stern occasion calls for war, And the trumpets shrill and peal, Forges and armories ring all day With the fierce clash of steel.

The blades are heated in the flame, And cooled in icy flood, And besten hard, and beaten well, To make them firm and pliable, Their edge and temper good;

Then tough and sharp with discipline, They win the fight for fighting men. When God's occasions call for men, His chosen soul He takes, In life's hot fire He tempers them, With tears He cools and slakes:

With many a heavy, grievous stroke He beats them to an edge, And tests and tries, again, again, Till the hard will is fused, and pain Becomes high privilege; Then strong, and quickened through and through, They ready are His work to do. Like an on-rushing, furious host The tide of need and sin. nless the blades shall tempered be,

They have no chance to win ; iod trusts to no untested sword When he goes forth to war: Only the souls that, beaten long On pain's great anvil, have grown strong His chosen weapons are. Ah souls, on pain's great anvil laid. Remember this, nor be afraid! -Susan Coolidge, in The Congregational-

Notes of Various Interesting and Timely Matters.

The Chinese artichoke (staobys tuberifico) which is recommended by the Country Gentleman, Albany N. Y., as being very prolific, yielding as much as 500 bushels of tubers per acre, has not been extensively distributed in this country, and some allowance must be made of the claims in favor of the new varieties as soil and climate are to be considered. No doubt if all that has been stated in its behalf is true it will prove a valuable acquisition, but heavy yields can only be secured when the soil is rich. The common artichoke yields largely if given cultivation. One difficulty with artichokes is that after being established they are not easily eradicated, the fields being given up to hogs, which root up the tubers, to which they are very partial.
