The crime with which Richardson

stands charged is the burning of the general store of L. B. Dorn, at Fairhope, this county. Dorn deals in general merchandise and carries a stock of between $4,000 and $5,000 worth of goods. He and his family and a boarder named Brown occupy a dwelling some fifty feet from the store. About 4 o'clock last Friday morning one week ago Mrs. Dorn was aroused by a noise at the gate in front of the dwelling. Looking out of a window she discovered a light at the store. She at once aroused her husband, who soon saw that the store building was in flames. Mr. and Mrs. Dorn harried to the burning building, but it was too late to fight The supervisors of Somerset township | the fire, as the entire building was enveloped in flames. A strong stench of kerosene permeated the atmosphere and it was apparent that it had been used in firing the building. While Dorn and his wife were standing helpless watching their store and its contents perish they heard Brown cry out that their home was on fire. Hastily beating a retreat to the house they found that the rear porch was in flames and burning furiously. The two Dorns and Brown secured a number of bucketfuls of water with which they made a successful fight against the fire at the dwelling and soon had it nuder control. Camp Humphreys engaged in the regular routine duty. The next move they made was in Burnside's Winter Campaign, known as the "mud march," on the 20th of January, 1863. A warm rain set in during this march and thawed out the ground and anchored the army hopelessly in the mud. After suffering untold hardships they returned a second time to their old camp, where they remained until the camp and moved West with the Fifth, stream was from four to five feet deen, sold and swift.
