nill, about one mile distant from his nome, and seven miles east of Somerset. Mr. Rayman had charge of the yard surrounding the mill and when he had no lumber to stack or other ontside duties he frequently assisted the men at work on the mill. About two o'clock Saturday afternoon he entered the mill, and, takpoint directly opposite the rapidly revolving saw. He wore a long coat to rotest him from the weather, and the instant the carriage came to a stand still a Scuil, Esq., came up from Pittsburg on gust of wind blew the tails of his coat Saturday and remained until Monday at over the saw, where they were caught by the sharp teeth and he was drawn to his death, his body being frightfully mutilated. His left arm was severed at the wrist and his left leg, after being out off near the hip, was thrown a distance of fifty feet. The revolving disc threw the nfortunate man in a position where the rolless steel teeth laid open his body the entire length and split his head almost in two pieces. Some time elapsed before his fellow workmen, who were eve-witnesses of the frightful scene, recovered from the shock, but they harriedly gathered together the dismembered body and renoved it to his late home.
