"Suddenly there was a horrible crash lity to do, and that is to maintain the principles of the Republican party and defy the insurgents to do their worst. If these insurgents refuse to permit the majority to elect a Senator at this session the insurgents themselves must assume the responsibility. It is not improbable that the new Congress which meets in December will so change the law relating to the election of Senators as to provide for a plurality election, and under such circumstances the asurgents would be powerless. If tals change is not made, then the Republican majority can appeal in all confideace to the people at the November election in 1933, when a new Logislature will be chosen. The manner in which the primaries are reflecting the views of the people shows that the insurgents can have no hope. We do not fear a split in the party
