A MIDDY'S CAPTURE. "Blubbery won't do any good; you had better report the matter to Captain Wilson at once," said the navigating lieutenant of her majesty's ship Triumph as he gazed quizzically down at the chubby-faced middleman who stood in such comical dismay before his superior officer.

THE Beauty of Roman Women. Northern beauty, however fine may be the lines of its contour, is never so good as the beauty of the body, a mere beauty of the body, a thing beginning with itself and ending in itself.

Not an Observant Man. The old man in the shaggy overcoat mentioned something about Kansas in his talk, and the Bostonian leaned over toward him and asked: "Did you say you were from Kansas?"

Messages Without Wires. It is the confident expectation of officers of the signal corps of the army that within a short time messages can be flashed to and from the war department to Fort Myer, five miles away, without the aid of wires.

Their Origin. Columbus, the discoverer of America, was the son of a weaver. The eminent French humorist, Francois Rabelais, was the son of an apothecary. Cervantes, the illustrious Spanish author was the son of an ancient but reduced family. He early entered military service and served as a common soldier. The great French dramatist, Moliere, was the son of a taphet-maker. Terence, the celebrated Roman dramatist, was at one time a slave. Homer, most illustrious of poets, was at one time a beggar. The Greek poet, Hesiod, was a farmer's son. Demosthenes, the most celebrated orator of antiquity, was a crier's son. The great English preacher, George Whitfield, was the son of an innkeeper at Gloucester. Thomas Wolsey, the English Cardinal and statesman, was a butcher's son. Edmund Halley, the English astronomer and mathematician, was the son of a soap manufacturer. Dr. Thomas, Bishop of Worcester, was a line-drafter's son. Dr. Mountain, Bishop of Durham, was the son of a beggar. Joseph Hall, Bishop of Norwich and theological writer, was a farmer's son. Virgil, the great Latin epic poet, was the son of a potter. Horace was a shop-keeper's son. Ptolemy, one of the greatest of Roman comic poets, was the son of a baker. The English lexicographer, Dr. Samuel Johnson, was the son of a book-dealer. Oliver Cromwell was a brewer's son. Robert Burns, the Scotch poet, was a plowman in Ayrshire. William Shakespeare, "the chief literary glory of England," was a yeoman's son. The celebrated American engineer, Robert Fulton, was at one time a jeweler's apprentice. Daniel Webster was the son of a small farmer. From the most humble origin, Thurlow Weed became one of the leading journalists of the United States, and a great political leader. William Cullen Bryant was the son of a physician. Andrew Jackson was born at Waxaw settlement, South Carolina. While the future President was still a mere child his father died, and the family was left in very reduced circumstances, on a half-cleared farm in a new settlement. Abraham Lincoln was the son of a poor farmer. Thomas Jefferson, the writer of the "Declaration of Independence," was a planter's son. William E. Gladstone, "the grand old man," was a merchant's son. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt's Presents. Some foolish and light-minded individual, writing in the Chicago News, affirms that while the bridal gifts to Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, as the printed invoice shows, are many and presumably pretty, they seem to be lacking in many important items, particularly if the young couple intend to go to housekeeping. The list abounds with jewels, gold dishes, toilet sets and "several handsome carts and traps," but there are none of those articles which a young husband and wife look for. There was no plain album with a picture of the giver; no half dozen "cane-stem dining chairs; no cook stove; no order for $10 worth of groceries; no slippers for the groom nor quilt quilts for the bride. When Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt move into their little flat they will miss these articles for they go a long way toward making a young couple feel at home. "Walden" worked in a golden dinner table and hung in the front room is not so costly as "twenty-four gold dishes," but it means a lot more to the person who made it. But by saving a little each week Mr. Vanderbilt can add to his house furnishings. It is not necessary to get everything at once. If Mrs. Vanderbilt does her own work, which she probably will do, the money thus saved can be put by for a rainy day. As we are informed, Mr. Vanderbilt will have only $1,000 a day until next fall, after which he will do better. Until then he should live economically, for it is a bad thing for a young couple to run in debt. It will be a happy home, anyway. We can see the young wife putting up with a plain dinner in a golden dinner table and watching him hurry away to toil for the soulless New York Central. At eventide the two will sit down to a frugal supper of terrapin, canvasback duck, etc., after which they will hang the pictures, put down the carpet in the back bedroom and change the sofa to the other corner. Then Mrs. V. will place the milk pail with a pint tickle in it on the back porch, with the clock, put out the cat, and the little flat will be wrapped in slumber. How the Heart Beats at Night. The main use of the coverings at night is to give the body the warmth that is lost by reduced circulation of the blood. When the body lies down it is the intention of nature that it should rest, and that the heart especially should be relieved temporarily of its regular work. So that organ makes ten strokes a minute less than when the body is in an upright posture. This means 600 strokes in sixty minutes. Therefore, in the eight hours that a man usually spends in taking his night's rest the heart is saved nearly 5,000 strokes. As it pumps six ounces of blood with each stroke, it lifts 30,000 ounces less of blood from the heart's session than it would during the day, when a man is usually in an upright position. Now, the body is dependent for its warmth on the vigor of the circulation, and as the blood flows so much more slowly through the veins when one is lying down, the warmth lost in the reduced circulation must be supplied by extra coverings.—N. Y. Herald. Apt Quotations. Proverbs, axioms and wise sayings have been uttered by Confucius and other wise men from time immemorial, but few people realize how many there are of them. C. I. Hood & Co., of Sarasparrilla fame, have over two thousand and they have originated the ingenious plan of serving them up in delectable shape in the shape of newspapers, and with each issue one neatly turning point as to the merit of their well known medicine. The extensive use of these proverbs is original and creditable to Hood & Co. The Appetite of a Goat. Is envied by all poor dyspeptics whose Stomach and Liver are out of order.
