Rachel's O' dest.

Rachel Bowers was far from being happy, and yet she was mistress of one of the grandest mansions, and one of the finest estates, in Middlesex.

In the other years, when she was plain Rachel Stevens, her father and her mother had been the keepers of Oakwood, as the estate was called.

Jason and Matilda had not been married until well advanced in life. They had met first upon the estate, and Rachel was their only child.

But Capt. Barnaby Bowers came home. He was fifty, and not ill-looking. He was very kind to Jason Stevens and his wife.

At first Rachel was shocked; but in time she was able to reason calmly. She knew that she could never love Capt. Bowers.

For an order of $50 from a club of thirty we will pay the Agent as commission $3 yards blanked or brown shoddy, good dress cloth, all wool pants pattern, or $3.50 in cash.

enough; but had he borne her image in his heart as she had borne his?

As she had loved her sailor boy she could never love another. But could she love Capt. Barnaby at all?

So Rachel married with Capt. Barnaby Bowers. She told him frankly that she did not love him as a wife should love a husband.

Thus for two years, and then, Barnaby Bowers died, and was buried. His will was read, and it was found to be very simple.

At first Rachel cared not for this. She did not think she would ever wish to marry again.

She put up her hand and stopped him. She had resolved that she would tell the whole truth, and trust the result to Providence.

"Yes, Arthur." "And you've loved Oakwood?" "I would give up all else for your true love."

Rachel went down, and met the stranger in the drawing-room; and she met one raised from the dead.

This was Rachel's dream of love—a child's dream; but, nevertheless, one from which all future thoughts of love were to take direction.

What One Girl Did.

About seven years ago I became acquainted in Ohio with a young girl who possessed none of this world's goods except the clothes she wore.

The one great desire of her heart was to obtain an education. For one who was so poor, this seemed utterly impossible.

When evening came, they met again. Arthur saw that Rachel had been weeping, and he took her in his arms and spoke to her tenderly.

"Pardon me if I allowed my grief to lead me astray. I had hoped I had found in your heart some relief for that affection which I had treasured up for so many years."

"I will, I hope, prove a successful wife to you. I should ever marry for the sake of all for love, and not support her."

"A San Francisco man saturated a rat with kerosene oil, and then set fire to him and let him loose, thinking he would convey certain valuable information to other rats."

"A young lady having called out an ugly gentleman to dance with her, he was astonished at the condition, and believed that she was in love with him."

"John was thought to be very stupid. He was sent to a mill one day, and the miller said: 'John, some people say you are a fool!'"

A Rhenish Legend.

A Zurich correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, writes of the town of St. Gallen, Switzerland, says: There is a fine old cathedral there, dating from 1104.

The legend saith, that during the Crusades the lord of the castle went over to the holy war, leaving behind him a young wife to whom he was but recently wed.

The disconsolate wife had an immense bell of silver made, being in her great tower, and set apart a large sum of money, the result of which was to support a perpetual bell.

One of my friends a very earnest, shrewd man, who always seems to know how to do the best thing at the right time.

"Will an oblige me with the largest sheet of paper you have?" "What do you mean? What's the use?"

"Which?" asked my friend, who had joined the crowd. "If you mean what is on the paper, I did that; but if you mean the man, you did that!"

"John was thought to be very stupid. He was sent to a mill one day, and the miller said: 'John, some people say you are a fool!'"

"I was told so by the girls." "Loving Eyes." (the song) He replied, "I'm told so by the girls."
