A Sailor's Description of a Dance. Haven't had any fun with the land-lubbers till Thursday night, at a dance. When I arrived in the cabin found 'em under way on a Spanish dance. Took my station in line with Susan Tucker - fell back and filled, then shot ahead two fathoms - hauled up on the starboard tack to let another craft pass, and came stern on another sail, spoke her, and bore round against the sun, and fell in with another sail in full chase. Passed twenty sail on same shore, and when half across to the shore, drop astern - fell back - couldnt fill, so let go anchor and hauled up for repairs. Next time I was drawn into the current by a cottlebin, but didn't make much headway - shot head with Betsy Stark, and sailed over to the other coast. Took a turn opposite ran abreast twice towards other craft, and back astern again - moved round to starboard past partner's lights, and made sail to berth. Third time ran into port with the time of the tempest, the Yankee tar's favorite. Proceeding along up coast according to the regular order of sailing bore ahead again - rounded to - then passing adversary yard arm by yard arm, locked astern with the whole squadron, in circular order of sailing. Sally Jones all the time maneuvering and making signals when under full sail. Finally anchored after a heavy squall.

Humorous. We take the following from the Editor's Drawer in Harper's Magazine, for March: HUMORS OF THE SCAFFOLD.-An Irishman had been convicted of a robbery of the Old Bailey sessions, for which he was brought up, with others, to receive judgment of death. The prisoner, on being called on by the officer of the court in the usual way to declare what he had to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon him, advanced to the front of the dock, with a vacant stare, and inquired, "What was the question?" "You have been convicted of robbery. What have you to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon you according to law?" "Faith," answered the prisoner, "I have nothing much to say, except that I do not think I am safe in your hands."

How She Did It. The Lawrence American tells the following story: A gentleman passing down Magazine street a few days since, was astonished as he went by a window to see a pair of rosy lips suddenly pressed against the glass and a pair of flashing blue eyes looking unmissably love at him through the window. It was not in the nature of man to resist such an appeal as this, and lifting his hat courteously, he inquired: "I beg your pardon, but do you wish to kiss me?" The lady had evidently been mistaken. She mistook him for somebody else, and fled incontinently from the room. The gentleman went on his way; but that same night was introduced to the lady at a ball. It is needless to say that they recognized each other. After the usual courteous expressions of a first acquaintance, the gentleman inquired if the lady was fond of kissing. "Oh, not at all," she said, "but my lips are very feverish, and of cold mornings I sometimes press them against the window panes to chill them."

Miscellaneous. Wasting Time - Hugging the girl! None but the brave dispute the fact. When it's a penny - like a hermit! - When it's a loan (alone). When is a black dog not a black dog? - When it's a greyhound. A California jury in a suicide case lately found the following verdict: "We, the jury find that the deceased was a fool." Rapped Up. - Physicians are proverbially absent-minded, and the reason is obvious - they are often rapped up in their profession. To-morrow. - A French barber's sign reads thus, "To-morrow the public will be shaved gratuitously." Of course it is always "to-morrow."

How It Sounded in the Garret. - "As true as the first of John," writes an Ohio correspondent, is the following: "Liel Calkins lives in the village of - Liel is no singlet, for Liel's musical efforts were discouraged in their first timid ventures. Besides, he had to commence farther back than most folks. His first essay resulted in breaking up a Sunday-school 'in a row'; and this resulted in the 'old man' peremptorily ordering the abashed Liel to attend singing-school. Liel went, but on the first night discreetly kept silent, wholly absorbed in observing how others surmounted the difficulties which environ 'Days of Absence,' and in endeavoring to note, for future use, 'the lick it was done for.'" On the following Sabbath Liel took his 'Missour Harmony,' and repaired to the attic to practice. He had about arrived at the conclusion that he was worrying no little melody out of that 'hymn,' when he heard a stealthy step on the stairs. Looking nervously around, he beheld the falling eye of the 'old man' looking 'lick' or 'wishes' at him. He likewise heard a voice, to him less musical than his own, exclaiming: "'Liel, I've tried to bring you up a decent and moral boy, and now, when you ought to be dressing for meeting, here you are saving clapboards on Sunday!'"

Franklin's Loan. The following letter was written by Dr. Franklin while at Paris, and was communicated by the person who received it to the person by whom it was originally published: April 22, 1784. I send you herewith a bill for ten Louisd'or; I do not pretend to give such a sum, I only lend it to you. When you shall return to your country you cannot fail of getting into some business that will in time enable you to pay all your debts. In that case when you meet with another honest man in similar distress, you must pay me by lending this sum to him, enjoining him to discharge the debt by a like operation when he shall be able, and shall meet with such another opportunity. I hope it may thus go through many hands before it meets with a knave to stop its progress. This is a trick of mine for doing a deal of good with a little money. I am not rich enough to afford much in good work, and so am obliged to be earning and make the most of a little.

What are you doing there? - inquired Jack, of Tom, as he caught him peering through the keyhole. "What's that to you?" said Tom. "I don't like to see a person prying into other people's business." A lady who has been reading law is in the most fearful and agonizing doubts regarding the legality of her married condition. She says, "Lotteries are illegal, and marriage is the greatest luxury in life!" A barister blind of one eye, pleading with his spectacles on, said: "Gentlemen, in my argument I shall use nothing but what is necessary." "Then," whispered a wag, "take one of your glasses out of your spectacles." A physician being asked by a patient if he thought spouts now and then would hurt him much, replied, "I do not know that a little occasionally would hurt you much; but if you don't take any, it won't hurt you at all."

Clara Louisa Kellogg rode through Pennsylvania on a locomotive, and rung the bell at the crossing just like a man. The engineer says whenever she gets out of a job singing, all she has to do is to come to him and she can have a job firing on the engine. He likes the way such a bell rings.
