The Scenery of Forest.

It is not customary for those living in Forest county to boast much of the scenery within its borders, but we all appreciate it. For the sake of showing how strangers view the land about Tionesta, we make some extracts from a letter written to the Beaver Argus, by Rev. R. T. Taylor, Principal of the Beaver Seminary, while on a visit to some of his pupils in this place:

"This town is beautifully located on the left bank of the Allegheny, one hundred and fifty miles above Pittsburgh.

"The Tionesta Creek enters the Allegheny just below the town. For forty or fifty miles from its mouth, this creek has been lined with lumber mills which have been gradually reaching further up and to the right and left for their supplies of pine timber. This supply not only on the Tionesta, but also on the Clarion and upper Allegheny stretching up into the state of New York will be almost entirely exhausted in another decade, so that we shall be obliged to look elsewhere for our framing timber as we are already doing for our other descriptions of lumber or use hemlock of which on some of these streams there are still large quantities.

"This town, with other portions of Venango county, got themselves annexed to the 'Old Forest' county, which was rightly named, absorbed it and became the county seat some four years since. They have a new Court House—a fine and imposing brick structure, overlooking the valley and commanding a view of the river above and below in its beautiful meandering among the miniature mountains, wooded down to the water's edge. In former visits to this town I have been struck with its beauty of situation, but never before as now have I had the opportunity of viewing its picturesque scenery from different 'stand points' for miles above and below. How I wish our photographer Noss, with his camera and skill in taking stereoscopic views might visit this portion of the Allegheny, and add to his list of beautiful glimpses of American Scenery."

Here's what the Clarion Democrat thinks of the situation in regard to the President Judgeship of this district:

The Republicans of this judicial district are waiting and watching to see the result of the Democratic convention. If the Democrats are unable to unite on one candidate, and both Jenks and Corbett run, the Republican programme is to nominate and run Judge Gordon. There are about 5,000 Democratic votes, and 4,000 Republican votes, in the district. If the Democrats divide their votes between two candidates, the Republicans feel confident of electing their nominee. It is contrary to our custom to discuss matters relating to candidates before nomination, and we can only express what we know is the feeling of the mass of the Democratic party, that we hope some satisfactory conclusion will be arrived at, by which a Democrat will be elected. It is not strictly a political office, but while we have a large majority in the district, and have, to say the least, as good men as the opposition, it would not be creditable to the Democrats to divide their strength and thus elect a Radical Judge to serve for the next ten years.

What it Means.

The North Carolina and Kentucky elections possess a real significance, for an interpretation of which no one, especially no Democrat of ordinary intelligence, will be at a loss. In the first place, the negro vote, on which confessedly much depends, has not gone nor is it going over to the Democratic party. It remains the firm support of the Republican party, and in the ensuing Presidential contest will prove a safe reliance to carry not only North Carolina for the Republican candidate, but so large a proportion of the Southern States as at once to destroy the expectations of the Democratic leaders. For surely, if having lost North Carolina this year, what right has that party to expect to carry the State next; or South Carolina, or Mississippi, or Louisiana, or Florida? And, having met with such heavy losses in Kentucky, with what reason can it hope to hold on to Alabama or Tennessee, or Virginia even? These election returns all at once change the prospect as the Democratic leaders have been picturing it to themselves, and reaffirm the fact that the American party cannot again be induced to trust the party which sympathized with the slaveholder's rebellion and at the darkest hour of the contest raised the white flag and proclaimed for peace at any price. The people are not, for any provocation that exists or is likely to exist, going to change and go over to this party; and it is one of the amazing things of the times in which we live that the Democratic leaders do not perceive that the old crust must be shed and thrown away, a new body and soul acquired, and even a new name taken before they have the slightest chance of gaining the confidence of the nation. If it is said that the old Democratic party would then go out of existence and a new and altogether different one take its place, all we have said is, nevertheless, true. The party that would take up for the Presidency such a man as Charles Francis Adams, ignore Tammanyites of every sort, and wherever they exist, and accept at its full meaning the lesson of the last twelve years, might have some chance of success—probably might succeed when it had shown that it was acting without false pretense. But there is no such possibility for the great non-partisan class of voters, and the Republican party will continue to receive their support and will elect the next President. This is the lesson taught by every election that has taken place within the year.—Pittsburgh Commercial.

In the annals of medical science a few cases—and only a few—are recorded where women who had passed the age of three-score years have given birth to children. These occurrences are considered extraordinary, and always awaken a lively interest among scientific men. In one of our exchanges we find the statement that a lady named Mrs. Betsy Hudson, living about six miles north of Warren, Pa., on the Jamestown and Warren road, aged six-five years, presented her husband a few days ago with a healthy, bouncing baby. This is one of the most remarkable instances on record, and should receive the attention of the medical fraternity.—Pittsburgh Commercial.

—Maj. J. H. McLaughlin, of this city, is now the champion wrestler of the world. He published a challenge in the New York Clipper, inviting any man in the world to match him, and gave thirty days for a reply. This time has expired, and there is no answer to his challenge. The Major deposited several hundred dollars with Frank Queen, of the Clipper, as a guarantee of his sincerity, but the amount has not been covered. We therefore pronounce Maj. J. H. McLaughlin champion wrestler of the world.—Pittsburgh Courier.

The Erie Dispatch says: We are not able to give detailed particulars, but can announce that the very thing which the citizens of Erie have been struggling so hard for to no purpose—a direct road to the oil region—will soon be an accomplished fact, and that without trouble or difficulty. It is well known that the Oil Creek and Allegheny River Railway (lessees of the Pennsylvania Central) have secured a perpetual lease of the Union and Titusville Road. At a meeting of the directors of the Oil Creek Road it was decided to at once put down a third rail, making a 4 foot 8 1/2 inch track, to correspond with the Philadelphia and Erie track, and freight from Erie will run direct to Titusville. It is further stated that there will be no discrimination as against Erie in the matter of oil and other freight. Our information is from such source that we have every reason to believe its general correctness, and if it is as stated, it is the most important news Erie has had for many a year.

HARRISBURG, PA., Aug. 9, 1871. The State Prohibition Convention met in the Senate Chamber at 10 A. M., and permanently organized with James Black, of Lancaster, as Chairman. Thirty-eight delegates were present, representing fifteen counties. Strong resolutions were adopted, and the following persons were placed in nomination: Mr. Barr Spangler, of Lancaster, for Auditor General, and Hon. E. H. Wheeler, of Sharon, Mercer county, for Surveyor General. Entire harmony characterized the proceedings of the Convention.—Pittsburgh Commercial.

The following cable dispatch has been received from London: Great excitement is occasioned here by the announcement of the discovery of large and valuable gold fields in New Caledonia, an island in the South Pacific Ocean, between lat. 20 deg. and 122 deg. min. south, and lon. 164 deg. and 67 deg. east. Numerous parties are forming with the intention of proceeding to the island. Diggers are leaving for the newly discovered fields in great numbers. Several rich veins are stated to be already in successful working operations.
