SMOKE.

Professor Maulesel, a German gentleman who has recently arrived in this city, has secured a suitable lot on South G Street, and is about to erect extensive works which will prove of almost incalculable advantage to all lovers of the "weed."

From the smokeometer a main pipe will lead up into the city, and from this will be small branch pipes leading to all the principal houses and saloons in the town.

When a man desires to take a smoke he has not to go to the trouble of hunting up tobacco and filling his pipe, then of finding and lighting a match, and perhaps burning his fingers.

The rates of insurance of those who have neither pipes nor cigars upon their premises will be greatly reduced, and in this one item the Professor calculates that the cost of introducing the smoke into an ordinary family residence will be saved each year.

But some may ask, "How is a smoker of the inveterate class to have his smoke when walking the streets or traveling?"

The shop-keeper, who was a warm-hearted Christian as well as a zealous temperance man kindly encouraged him never to drink anything but the best liquor in the future.

"There was more pork than I wanted; let me trouble you for a little potato to eat with the pork." And shortly afterward:

What must we think of a husband's appreciation of the partner of his joys, when the artist who has painted the wife's portrait is obliged to sue for the money? A Newark jury agreed to disagree on a verdict recently, after wrestling all night over it.

the rubber of the smoke tank a suitable thickness and strength, it will be found to be very convenient when the wearer desires to sit, as it will serve as a cushion, a something which is often a great convenience and comfort.

WHAT A MISPLACED COMMA DID.

The comma (,) that little dot which is a very insignificant thing to the eye, sometimes plays an important part in language. Though the rules for its use, like its relative, are somewhat obscure, nevertheless its function in some cases is very clear and of considerable moment.

"Give us a glass of your best liquor," said a drunkard the other day, as he entered a shop. The shop-keeper filled a glass and gave it to him.

"What's the matter?" said the shop-keeper; "wasn't it good?" "Why, yes, it was good enough, but seems to me it wasn't very strong."

"Cold water," was the reply; "that's the best liquor we have in the shop, and I believe it is the best in town."

"There was more pork than I wanted; let me trouble you for a little potato to eat with the pork." And shortly afterward:

The man who pawned his set of false teeth for a crust of bread was also obliged to hire a boy to eat it for him.

PAPER DIDN'T STATE.

The following is rather an old, but is such a capital illustration of the high flown way in which newspapers sometimes tell things that it will bear republishing:

"I declare, wife, that was an awful accident over to the mill," said Mr. Slocum.

"What is it about, Mr. Slocum?" "I'll read the 'count, wife, and then you'll know all about it."

"When he became entangled. His arm was drawn around the drum and finally his whole body was drawn over the shaft at a fearful rate."

"Well, didn't it kill him?" asked Mrs. Slocum with increased interest.

"This fatal causality has cast a gloom over our village; and we trust that it will be a warning to all persons who are called upon to regulate the powerful machinery of our mills."

"I declare, wife," said he, "it's curious but really, the paper don't say!"

California being a new state, thinks she must always be proposing something new. Her newspapers have lately been finding fault with the State prison system, and now call for the abolishment of penitentiaries.

YOUTHFUL SUICIDE.

Jerome Pinney, Jr., a son of Mr. Jerome Pinney, of Thompson, Ohio, ten years of age, committed suicide on the 23d. The particulars of the singular tragedy are thus given by the Geneva Times: The boy was at school on Friday, and at noon got into an altercation with one of his mates, when both drew knives, making passes at each other, one report stating that young Pinney cut the other boy slightly.

Courtship and marriage in Sweden are peculiar institutions. De Chailin says: "I saw one match made. He met her at the gate and poked his fingers in her ribs, and said: 'I want to get married; don't you? Oh, I don't know. Go away. Yes, you do; let's get married.'"

There is one act of politeness which in some of the European countries, the poorest peasant never forgets. It is the salutation of the dead.

A woman named Brink, while boarding at a house in Fort Jervis, N. Y. gave birth to a child. When she came to leave the house she could not pay her board, and the child was kept as security.

The Victoria Magazine says that Germany stands lower in civilization than any European country except Turkey; for in no other country does woman occupy so ignoble and servile a position.
