He was running out a creek piece from Newtown and when at or near Morgan's mill, an oar blade was broken, which rendered the "piece" unmanageable. Sibble tried to land, when by some means his left ankle was caught in a coil of the cable, and he was thrown into the creek. One end of the line was fast to a log raft which was tied there, and the parties on the raft took in the situation at a glance, and seeing that if they could not pull him to their raft, he must certainly drown, they pulled him in through two hundred feet of water, his lifted him on the raft. It was seen at once that he was seriously hurt, and he was immediately carried to a house close at hand, and Chus, Harrangton was sent to summon medical assistance, Drs. Winans and Blaine repaired to the place as soon as the state of the roads would permit, and found the unfortunate man suffering terribly the tibin, or shin bone was disjointed at the ankle, and protruded through the skin four inches. The sight was said to have been horrible. The boces were with great difficulty put in their proper position, the surgeons believing there were some hopes of saving the foot, giving the sufferer, at all events, the benefit of the doubt. The foot may yet have to be amputated, but it is hoped that it will not be necessary. Ten days will tell whether he is to become a sound man or otherwise. We fervently hope that his limbs may be spared him, as he is a hard-working, industrious man, and literally one who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow. He was three years in the army, serving in the 83d Regiment P. V. and was a good soldier, coming out at the close of the war without a scratch, and it is really unfortunate if the man is to lose his foot, that it did not occur in the service of his country, so that the pension might in some degree compensated for his misfortune.
