OBITUARY.

Mr. Geo. 5. Siggins died at his home at West Hickory, on Friday evening August 20th, aged about 66

Mr. Siggins was a lover of nature in all her varied forms, and looked from nature up to nature's God. He was peculiar and original in the bent of his mind, and, in deeds, was hospitable and charitable, and, like Ben Adhem, of old, "loved his fellow man." The bright, sunshiny poems of Burns possessed especial charms for him, as his well-worn copy of those poems attest. Like the patriach Abraham, "he died in the presence of his brethren," and his body was laid to rest near the spot where be had lived for upward of four decades, and among the home scenes he loved so well. His furneral was largely attended by those who had known and honored him through life.

"If justice, temperance, truth, could save A fellow mortal from the grave, This grave within its narrow sphere Could ne'er contain its tenant here.'

The services were conducted by Rev. Mechling, of Fagundus, assisted by Rev. Lusher, of the Tionesta charge.

Further, he says the war howl is worn out. It appears to be in some particular instances, but if ever we (and here we claim to be even more conscientious than Conver) vote for a man who opposed the war, and favored the South during the war, we hope to be disfranchised; unless there are more reasons therefor than now exist.

Clarington Correspondence.

CLAHINGTON, PA., Aug. 20, 1875. ED. REPUBLICAN :- The past week was the last of the summer term of school in this place, and the closing exercises which came off in the Methedist church on Saturday evening, were of a highly entertaining character, reflecting credit upon the teacher, Mr. B. F. Bentty, and being highly ereditable to all who participated

The exercises were opened by prayer by Rev. Weldon, followed by a chant, "I will lift up mine eyes," by the school, Miss Emma Coon presiding at the organ (which position she filled during the evening, with marked ability).

The Protogue, by Miss Emma Long, was a gem. "Walking with the World," a recitation, by Miss Hattie Steenburgh, came next, followed by other recitations, by Nora Hillard, Carrie Steenburgh, Louie Donkle, Rosa Davis and Nellie Steenburgh. Music, "The Heart to a Garden compare." Next, a dialogue, "The Gypsey Fortune-Teller, by Misses Elma Hillard and Louis Mays. Then "Home Questions," a recitation by Lona Heasly. A colloquy, by Elmer Heasly and Jerome Flick, "Go West, young man, Go West," brought down the house.

Music, "Beautiful Hills," a trio, was followed by declamations, by Masters Grant and Auson Hillard, Clarence and Charlie Coon, Curtis and Frank Williams, Willie Mays, Elmer Heasly, and Ira Steenburgh. "Warren's Address," by Curtis Shawkey, deserves special mention. "A Bass Song" by Mr. B. P. Beatty, who is a fine singer,

Then followed recitations by Janie and Linuie Williams, Martha Steenburgh and Louisa Coon. Music "Hold the Fort, for I am coming," was well received by the audience. "The New Church Organ," a recitation by Miss Calista Hillard, came next, after which oil. May he strike a gusher which Miss Jennie Shields read an essay on "Ministering Spirits." It was well read and was a production of real merit. Next was "The Doctors Loquiter," by B. F. Beatty. It was received with

> Then music, "Vesper hymn," a trio, by B. T. Beauty, Misses Ida Long, and Carrie Mays.

Next came a collequy, "After a Fasnion"; a scene from fashionable tife; Misses Nettie and Lona Heasly, and Effie Mays were the characters, and did so well as to draw forth rounds ! of applause. "Aunt Peggy's Courtship" came next and was received with roars of laughter. Evangeline Steele, Rosa and Curtis Shawkey, Lizzie Kerr and J. E. Hillard did the dramatis manuer that the cuthusiasm of the audience gove vent to itself in a deafening roar.

Miss Calista Hillard gossiped on "Gossiping," after which came "The Wandering Refugee," sung by Miss Emma Coon, Next on the list-or on the stage rather-came a farce, 'Ma-try-money," in four scenes. This performance was a success as was well attested by the applause of the audience.

Next came a trio, "Shall we meet in Heaven," sung by B. F. Beatty and Misses Emma and Louisa Coon. "A Fragment of the Beautiful" in the shape of the "Epilogue" was next read by Miss Carrie Mays; after which the school joined in singing "Sing Goodbye," when after a few remarks from Mr. Beatty the exercises of the evening were over, and soon "The lights 21. J. N. Tietsworth vs John Thompson were fled, the garlands dead, and we to our homes departed."
