CUSTOM GRINDING.

A SHORT SKETCH OF AN EDITOR.

Once upon a time an editor, after revolving in his weary mind a few of the wearing problems which are the mysteries of his singular profession, left the seclusion of his office and sallied forth into the busy world to do among men as he was done by. He had long years before been disabused of any impression which might have haunted his mind that he knew acything about editing a paper, for every man who came into his office knew more about that business than the unfortunate editor did, and never scrupled to tell him so. But the poor man thought it would be a very agreeable and pleasant thing to do as other men did, and it was for the purpose of following general custom that he went out on this beautiful day so long ago. such a bright, beautiful world, there could be so much misery, wretchedness, wickedness and total depravity. But there was all the same, for there was the editor to prove it.

He went into the office of a lawyer with whom he was slightly acquainted, and, seating himself in a chair, put his fect on the desk and began to whistle "Silver Threads Among the Gold," in a loud tone of whistle. The attorney looked astonished and asked what his visitor wanted. He said nothing, but took a bundle of papers from a pigeon hole, and began to look them over and read out loud. When he had got through, the indignant lawyer took his visitor by the neck and geally but firmly kicked him down stairs.

"And yet," mused the unhappy man, and agreed upon a this. An English edition of the printers join in this. An English edition of the printers join in this. An English edition of the printers join in this. An English edition of the cannon of the case of danger.

"Prayer-Book" came out a short time ago, with the following misplacement of a single letter: "Wilt thou love, honor and cherish," etc., etc., "and forsaking all others, keep thee only unto her as long as ye both shall like," —a change from "live" to "like," well suited to the changing habits of the present matrimonial life.

He went into a dry goods store, and had just time to get behind the counter when a lady came in and asked for some brown satin. "Yes'am," he said.

After creating an earthquake in that part of the store, he followed her directions and got what she wanted. "How much do you want?" he asked, "about half a column?"

She stared.
"Thirty or forty lines be enough?" he inquired,

She said she wanted half a yard. "Ahl" he said, "About eighteen squares-yes, yes, "And cut on the bias," she contin-

He turned sadly into a drug store, took a prescription from a poor wo-man standing there, looked it wisely over, and then took a little quinine, arsenic, morphine and strychnine, put them up in powders, and told the woman to give her husband one every two hours until he didn't complain any more about his head. As she went out of the door one of the powders spilled on a dog's back, and the Watches, Clocks, Solid and Plated animal died in three seconds. The editor was arrested, and only released on giving a solemn promise to support the sheriff for re-election.

"How is it," he wondered, "that all classes of men, of all occupations, have found time not only to perfect them-selves in their own business and professions, but also to master mine more thoroughly than I have been able to do by giving my entire time and strength to it?"

He sighed as he walked into a bank. He put his head in at the paying tell-er's window and shouted "Hello!" as loud as he could roar. Then he drummed on the glass with his fingers, and was forcibly ejected by the por-

"I give it up," he said. "I am the most worthless of mankind. On the same principle, in England, at a wholesale parish wedding where some dozen couples were to be united en masse on a Sunday, a shy sort of a man got crowded in the wrong place, next to a strong, bustling woman, who likewise missed her man, and, before they knew it, they were married, as was also the odd number two. Hereupon the shy man made so hold as to tell the min-ister of the mistake, and, while he was debating in his own mind what was to be done, the old woman exclaimed, "Sure, and let it be; isn't it fair all round, after all, and isn't one man as good as the other?" And they were watching the bright and glorious moon. It was the same old moon that had looked down on so many similar scenes, but some-how it had a different appearance tonight. It influenced the young man to such a degree that he said: "With what refulgence does bright Luns shed her rays upon all creation, weaving weird, fantastic shadows among the office in Commissioners Room, Court

How neat and tidy she looked, with a dark calico dress, blue checked apron and white oversleeves which came to her into the wagon, took up the liues, at I discovered that Jones was shot the same time putting her foot upon through the region of the stomach, the bullet glancing around that organ, and and drove off like any other butch-

For some shortcoming a St. Louis wife-a strict church member-knocked her husband down with a pudding stick and then held his head in a tub of dirty water until he was just ready to expire. Then she laid him on the lounge and, sitting by his side, read aloud a chapter in the bible, and wound up the exercise by asking him if he didn't believe the time is coming when all men shall be good.
