THE MARRIAGE OF GREAT MEN.

Byron married Miss Millbank to get money to pay his debts. It turned out a bad shift.

Robert Burns married a farm-girl with whom he fell in love while they worked together in a plowed field.

Milton married the daughter of a country squire, and lived with her but a short time.

Queen Victoria and Prince Albert were cousins, and about the only example in the long line of English monarchs wherein the marital vows were sacredly observed.

Shakespeare loved and wedded a farmer's daughter. She was faithful to her vows, but we could hardly say the same of the bard himself.

Washington married a woman with two children. It is enough to say she was worthy of him, and they lived as married folks should live—in perfect harmony.

John Adams married the daughter of a Presbyterian clergyman. Her father objected on account of John being a lawyer.

John Howard, the great philanthropist, married his nurse. She was altogether beneath him in social life and intellectual capacity.

John C. Calhoun married his cousin, and their children fortunately were neither diseased nor idiotic.

Peter the Great of Russia married a peasant. She made an excellent wife and sagacious Empress.

Humboldt married a poor girl because he loved her. Of course they were happy.

It is not generally known that Andrew Jackson married a lady whose husband was still living.

John C. Calhoun married his cousin, and their children fortunately were neither diseased nor idiotic.

Ambition is a notable cause of suicide. Some one has said in the case of Hayden, if he had only spent the time in painting which he did in trying to persuade his countryman that he could paint, he would have become the painter he wished to be.

A Frenchman killed himself from the ennui of pulling on his trousers every day; another from the monotony of nature's color, saying distraction, and that he desired to see everything in red for a change.

Jesus Christ has said that when a tree is old and can no longer bear fruit, it is good that it be destroyed.

The search after notoriety has led men to self destruction. One man jumped into the crater of Mount Vesuvius.

Asked a year ago a frequenter of the masked-balls of Paris, gaily habited as Pierrot, jumped into the Seine, with, of course, his "last word" planned to his garments, on which he had written that he had got his courage up to the jumping point by means of abstinence.

He had already in imagination seen himself in junketing attire stretched on the marble slab of the Morgue. This was the price of life.—Galaxy.

Some time ago two London thieves put in practice a plan of robbing a jeweller which had been described in a story in a popular periodical—a piece of pure invention.

The jeweller was furious (he lost forty thousand dollars, so it was excusable), and wrote to the editor of the magazine, asking him if it was his mission to instruct thieves in new ways of plundering the public.

"My dear sir," replied the editor blandly, "if you had taken in my periodical (which I hope in future you will do), you would have been put upon your guard. This comes of neglecting the claims of literature."

A Lebanon county editor has constructed a printing machine which "will set type, feed papers, and fold them ready for carriers."

He is now contriving an attachment to write editorials, collect subscriptions, and pay all bills presented; but it is feared he will not succeed.

A CANADIAN HERMIT.

The Carleton Place (Canada) Herald prints the following story, with the statements that, "incredible as it may appear, it is an authentic fact, to which hundreds can bear testimony."

About forty years ago a young man named Wilson, residing near the town of Perth, conceived the lunatic idea of leading a hermit's life.

The youth had from his early age showed symptoms of derangement, and this proceeding on his part was not considered strange by his friends.

The chosen place of his hermitage was about three-quarters of a mile from his parental homestead, in a recess of a dense bush, where he erected a small hovel, and furnished it with an old log canoe, which he used as a couch to sleep in.

Divesting himself of all clothing, he has ever since remained perfectly nude, with the exception of a tattered remnant of a shirt, which his fancy leads him to retain.

In this state for forty years he has lived, walking in the depth of winter through the snow, and yet he has never been known to have received a frost bite.

When he requires a drink he walks deliberately into the river, it mattering not to him what season of the year it may be, and wades out till the water reaches his waist, and then he stoops and quenches his thirst.

His food is brought to him by his friends, and when given to him is eaten with the voraciousness of an animal, which he now resembles more than man, his body being as heavily coated with hair as that of a cow.

He never shows a dangerous disposition, and chatters in monosyllables. When people cross his path he invariably begs for tobacco, for which he has an evident partiality, and in chattering tones will utter "bacca" until his request is granted.

His hair is long, gray and unkempt, falling far over his shoulders, and his beard, which is similar, reaches down below his waist.

He is now between sixty and seventy years of age.

WHAT WAS HE DOING? Not long ago a gay young merchant who lives at the South-end told his elderly wife that he was compelled from consideration of expediency to take a customer from the country to the theater.

When his elderly wife made comments upon the elaborate nature of his toilet for a rural person of the male sex, he replied: "O, you see everything depends upon impressing that sort of people favorably."

At this moment the merchant's office boy made his appearance. "Well," said the deceiving husband, "did you see the gentleman I sent you to?"

"Yes, sir," replied the messenger. "And you told him I had tickets for the theater?"

"Yes, sir, and he said he was much obliged to you, and he would be happy to go with you, and he would wait for you."

"What was he doing?" said the unsuspecting wife carelessly. "He was just fastening the strings of his pullback," answered the ingenious youth.

He found himself less than a moment afterwards on the curbstone, where he listened with a sweet smile to the shrill sounds of a woman's voice within.

Marshal Soul, once showing the pictures he stole in Spain, stooped before one and remarked: "I value that picture very much; it saves the lives of two estimable persons."

An aide-camp whispered in the listener's ear: "He threatened to have them both shot immediately unless they gave it up."

"What do you mean, you little rascal?" exclaimed an individual to an impudent youth who had seized him by the nose on the street.

"Oh, nothing—only I am going out to seek my fortune, and my father told me to seize hold of the first thing that 'turned up.'"

"Maria," observed Mr. Halcomb, as he was putting on his clothes, "there ain't no patch on them breeches yet."

"I can't fix it now, no way! I'm too busy." "Well, give me the patch then, an' I'll carry it around with me. I don't wan't people to think I can't afford the cloth."

Another mammoth cave has been discovered near Columbia, Ky., which rivals in awful grandeur the original Mammoth. In it were found three skeletons of extraordinary proportions.

The cave has plenty of galleries, and varieties of stalactites and stalagmites.

A young woman in Chicago put her false teeth in a glass of water at night, and in the morning found them imbedded in a chunk of solid ice.

She was late at breakfast, the process of thawing out the teeth with a bonfire of matches having been slow.

Punch once told a droll story of a man who, being suddenly raised to riches, exclaimed, in the fullness of his satisfaction: "Oh, that I could stand in the road and see myself ride by in my carriage."
