The fare was good, and the first day was partaken of by all with appetites that did justice to the grub. But on Tuesday morning, alas! only four passengers sat down to their meals; the rest, O, where were they? Well you couldn't see them, but you could hear them in their state rooms, apparently playing some game, every little while some one ejaculating o-o-o-o-h! with an unction, and then would hear a sound that was suggestive, but not appetizing. Your humble servant had the honor to be one of the brave four, whose stomachs were proof against sca-sickness, the bottoms of said stomachs remaining true to the attraction of gravity.

On the second day we came in sight of land, Poplar Island, and passed Cape Hatterns just as the sun was setting. The water was rough, to a landman, but the officers averred that it was profoundly smooth. On this day we noticed a dog, a rat and tan tarrier, which belonged to the captain's son, and we must say that in all our experience we never saw such a depraved beast. It actually chewed to bacco! and would snap savagely at any one who attempted to deprive it of the sweet morsel. We were humiliated, and went off and smoked.

Monday we had a quiet day, and watched the "sad sea waves," and the gulls, of which latter some fifteen or twenty followed us from Philadelphia to the mouth of the Eavagnah river.
