-Mr. Derickson's household goods bave arrived, and he is busy preparing for housekeeping. His home will be in the Holeman house on Vine St.

Several of our rafts men have returned from Pittsburgh. They had a pleasant trip, but we do not bear much in regard to the state of the market.

-A few, very few, trout have been caught this far this spring, and fishermen are discouraged accordingly. There will probably be no good trout fishing for a couple of weeks yet.

-Free Methodist meeting was held last evening at the Universalist Church, at which a lady conducted the services and delivered a sermon.

-Our readers will notice the new advertisement of H. G. Tinker & Co., dealers in Hardware &c., Oil City, Pa. They are well known as accommodatjug and reliable dealers.

-John Wilson got a slight rip on the left fore finger from the stave mill saw a day or two ago. Lucky that he did not lose his hand. He will be disabled but a short time.

-Prof. Gunning, late teacher of our public school, passed through town one day last week on a raft. He is a man of muscle, and could undoubtedly pull a good par.

Mr. Alex. Gordon, of Elkhart, lad., formerly of Nebrasks, this county, is in town at present on a visit to his friends. He is looking hearty, and reports his family well.

Wm. Richards has moved the house formerly occupied by ex-Sheriff Van Giesen, to a vacant lot about 100 feet south. He will build an addition thereto and soon he living at home.

-There will be a Centennial party at the Lawrence House on the evening of the 10th of May. The invitations are not yet out but the dance is bound to come off. McCray's band will forpish the music.

-On Tuesday of last week Con gressman Egbert telegraphed from Washington to the Derrick that there were one hundred and five thousand dollars in the United States Treasury for the depositors of the Venango National Bank, better known as Culver's Bank. Also, that C. V. Culver was trying to get it, and that he (Egbert) had notified the Treasurer not to pay Culver. The latter was out in a card in the Derrick a few days afterward, denying the statement as far as it applied to him. There were several depositors from this county who lost money when this bank went down, from the Derrick of Monday last puts a different face on the matter:

Later developments indicate that depositors in the Venango National Bank will not receive one cent of the money claimed to be in the United States Treasury at Washington. The Government is a preferred creditor of the defunct bank to the amount of about three hundred thousand dollars, which must be paid before the deposwhich must be paid before the depos-itors can receive anything. As nearly everything in the shape of assets has been realized, it will be seen that depositors need entertain no hopes whatever of sharing the hundred and five thousand dollars about which Dr. Eg-bert recently telegraphed.

-The Grove & Hart well, in this borough, is down 270 feet, and the last strike was salt water. The second sand has been gone through, and was twelve feet in thickness. There has been a good show of oil, ever since the first 100 feet were drilled. Several gallous were taken out of the first sand. The contract calls for a hole 300 feet deep. This will probably be fluished by to morrow night. If a moderately good well is not found at that distance, Mr. Grove proposes to go down to the fourth sand, if he can get fair terms from the stockhol-

-Knox's mill is running steadily, and slashing out good lumber at a great rate. We notice that the boom of the Superior mills is full of choice logs, which will be manufactured into lumber during the summer. The stave mill, while not running steadily, rips out lots of staves, and furnishes work and money to many. When Mr. W. G. Irwin starts up his handle manufactory we may look out for brisk

Southern Travels.

Farrell having transacted his business down the lake, came in about 8 o'clock, p. m., and we all turned in and slept like the babes of the woods, under mosquito bars. On the morning of the 21st Hammon concluded he would take Farrell back to Jupiter in his boat, to save him the walk. Not wishing to inhabit the plantation alone until his return, we concluded to go along. This time we took a smaller bont, about thirteen feet in length, called a "Whitehall," and after putting in a store of provisions, blankets and water, four of us started. Had of the alligator, We saw perhaps a fair wind, and went up to Lake forty in the eight miles we traveled Worth Inlet, about six miles in good through it. We had no arms except shape. The inlet being closed, we a large sized Smith & Wesson revolwere obliged to haul the boat over to the sea, a distance of about fifty yards, we made it terrid for the 'gators. The breakers were rolling quite high, One which we hit in the head, apparand there was a stiff breeze outside, ently got confused, and floated on the and for a little time we were undecided whether we would risk a voyage in to it. Lenhart then proposed to lift it our small boat, more particularly as into the boat, and reached down and we saw vast numbers of sharks sailing caught the creature by the tail. Just around among the breakers. However after a short council, it was deters consciousness, and giving a flip with mined that we try it. So the boat was his tail that wet us all over, and near-visits to this place for the purpose of and soon we were bounding gaily o'er the billows. There was just enough work left with Geo. W. Bovard, at danger about this ride to make it exciting. In the first place, if the boat were not navigated skillfully, we were in great danger of being swamped; and in the second place, we were accopanied by about a half-dozen large sharks who were ready to take us in out of the wet provided we swamped. night. In addition to this we had not proceeded far until every man in the boat began to show symptoms of seasickness. Farrell was the first to vield. his breakfast soon mingled with the mail. salty sea. In about two hours we arrived off Jupiter Inlet, and Hammon was issuing orders like a commodore. when, right in the midst of his conversation, he was interrupted by some emotion that caused him to lean over the stern, and his contribution to the Atlantic was harded in. The other chap, Lenhart, and ourself, although feeling waves of trouble roll across our stomachs, did not get to the interesting stage. So now we stood in for the shore; we took our station at the bow, Lenhart and Farrell the sides, and Hammon the oars, to pull in. When the bost struck the beach, we jumped, and run with all our might, 27tf the boat following us up close. We got very wet, but the boat was pulled ashore without shipping any water. This was considered a good land, as it is very seldom that a boat comes ashore in the breakers without filling.

Here we had another "haulover," Jupiter Inlet being also closed. After some heavy lifting we got the boat into the Inlet, and sailed over to the beaming mildly through her gold-rim- lighthouse. Here we took in our valise and some other traps, and Hammon took in two bags of wheat. The wheat was not for planting, as we first thought, but was used for food by used to keep me about detracted with the Lake Worth people, first being cracked in a mill Hammon kept for that purpose.

After a pleasant hour spent with the inhabitants of Jupiter, we started again for Lake Worth on the "inside route," which is, instead of a couple of hours ride, a hard days work for three men. We sailed and rowed up Lake Worth Creek about four miles. The crooks in this creek may be imagined when we, after sailing and rowing two miles up the creek, saw the lighthouse not over a quarter of a mile in a straight line from us. At the end of four miles we found a good camping place, and tied our boat up. Soon a roaring fire was kindled, and our usual fare was improved by some fresh tomatoes which we bad brought with us from the lake. After supper, inverted box, were erected, and under these we enjoyed a fine night's breakfast, we shipped again, and took ed that a sail could not be utilized. In about an hour we came to a place called the "rapids," in which there was about as much current as there is in an Allegheny river eddy in low water. Here the oars were put up, and poles resorted to. After pushing awhile, we were obliged to cease, and get out and pull the boat. Shortly By Robinson & Bonner, Dealers in we came into the "everglades," called "saw-grass." This consists of an immense flag, about eight feet high, with small channels running through it. These channels, sometimes not more than five feet wide, and very shallow, intersect one another every few rods, and it used to take an experienced pilot to find his way through, but recently the route has been marked by small flags, fruit caus on sticks &c., so that most any one can navigate it. In the saw-grass is the favorite home ver, but while our cartridges held out, water until our boat came quite up then the gater appeared to recover

In the morning, after an early

By dint of pushing and pulling, we two-thirds filled with water. The boat this place, the lake is about three
