Our Washington Letter.

Special to the REPUBLICAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 4, '76

The extradition treaty existing between this country and Great Britain was made thirty four years ago by Daniel Webster and Lord Ashburton and is now likely to be abrogated because of England's refusal to deliver up to the officer sent to bring him home, Winslow the forger, except upon a formal agreement by this Government that he shall not be tried for any crime other than the one upon which the warrant of extradition is based.

The spirit developed in the Cabinet meeting yesterday indicates that a notification will soon be sent to that very punctilious Government that Uncle Samuel is desirous that the tenth article of that long-standing agreement should be annulled. It was also decided at that meeting that hereafter, copies of any papers in the Executive Departments will be furnished to Congressional committees desiring them, instead of the original papers which can now only be examined in the Departments where they are filed.

The farmers are busily engaged at present, for we are enjoying splendid weather, only a little too dry. Lumber in large quantities is daily seen on the river, en route for some point on the Mississippi.

By way of local items I would mention that the grading on the Pine River Valley Railroad will be completed in about two weeks, and another Railroad has been laid out from this place to Freeport, Ill., and it is expected that work will soon commence on this Road.

Business is brightening up; produce is also on the advance, and it is hoped that we will have better times soon, yet I learn that hard times, and money close is a general complaint nearly everywhere.

The dairymen of Bear Valley have again resumed the manufacture of cheese, as this business has become quite an important item in this locality.

tients there appears to have been tainted meat, judging from the quantity supplied. Whatever the conclusions of the committee may be, I think from my observations, that members of this community will, hereafter, be very slow to send friends to that institution for treatment while under its present management.

MAXWELL. Western Correspondence.

LONE ROCK, RICHLAND CO., WIS., May 1, 1876.

As I sit this evening, looking south across the prairie, I notice that some person has set fire to the dry grass, and as a good breeze prevails the belt of fire runs beautiful; for a prairie fire is considered one the handsomest sights ever beheld; the roar of the fire sounds like a distant storm, and all wild game flee in dismay at the approach of this dread of all dangers.

I would be happy to have ye editor call on me some fine morning and we would visit the head waters of Bear Creek, and tempt some of the beautiful trout that are so plentiful in this stream; or, if we should tire of this sport we could turn our attention to the winging of some of the prairie chickens, that are found in abundance, and at this season of the year they make the morning and evening hideous with their noise.

By way of local items I would mention that the grading on the Pine River Valley Railroad will be completed in about two weeks, and another Railroad has been laid out from this place to Freeport, Ill., and it is expected that work will soon commence on this Road.

Choice blooded cattle can be seen here: in fact some of them verging on to thorough-breds. The Devon cow is considered the best for dairy use, although not so large as the short horned Durham.

information. His eagerness and ardor in obtaining information, his candid manner, his civility and courtesy, coupled with his other gentlemanly attributes, render him the most interesting person we ever had the pleasure of meeting."
