profitable results. Most of this improvement is due to the use of clover;

other influences have helped, but without clover all the manuring and under-

land would only suffice to maintain fertility, without perceptible improvement.

The best mode of utilizing clover becomes therefore the central question in agricultural improvement. Whether it shall be ploughed under, pastured or mown; whether it shall be turned under the year after being sown, or left to perfect its seed; whether it shall be sown alone, or with some some small grain crop; these are questions affecting vitally the prosperity of the farming population. The farmers of western New York, having long been foremost in wheat production, easily learned to use clover as its best auxiliary. With the progess of years they have learned experimentally the best modes of using clover. Forty years ago ploughing under clover when in full blossom was the standard method, Wheat then was the staple crop, and almost the only one which sold for money. A few cows to supply the family with milk and butter; hogs enough to fill the pork barrel and pay the taxes, and horses to work the farm, were almost the only stock kept on some of the largest and most successful wheat farms. The manure to make the wheat crop was furnished almost exclusively by the clover ploughed under the previous season. Since the introduction of mixed husbandry this system has been greatly changed. More stock is kept; more reliance is placed on manure; artificial fertilizers are more largely used each year, and there is comparatively little summer fallowing and plowing under having something to sell. Of late years shrewd farmers have learned to carry the system of mixed husbandry a step further, and add clover seed to their list of available crops. Eight or ten to fifty or seventy-five bushels of clover seed, as grown on many farms every year, are a valuable addition to the farm receipts for the year. The money thus secured is made quite as easily as any which the farmer receives, and I believe it is made not only without injury but with positive benefit to the soil, at least to its productive capacity. The farmers who grow clover seed are the men who become rich, for every year their fields become more fertile. The shade which the clover leaves during the heats of summer furnish to the ground increases the nitrogen which it holds, while the clover roots perform the equally beneficial operation of permeating the subsoil and bringing up the unavailable fertility from beneath and making it available, These advantages are, to some extent, neident to the use of clover in any way,

But the farmer who grows clover seed shades and mulches his soil more permetry, and secures a stronger and deeper rowth of root than if the plant is pasured or is ploughed under at any earlier period. There is a further and very aportant advantage in growing clover sed. He who has seed to buy sows paringly. He who grows it can afford er acre should be sown. After a few ears' growing of clover seed, the ground fill be filled with the seed, which will one of my neighbors ploughed a field in the fall, after taking off a clover seed erop. Barley was sown in the spring, and a good crop, about thirty bushels per acre, was grown. The field was then ploughed and sown with wheat, and though the farmer did not sow a quart of clover seed, he has as good a "catch" as any one could wish. Enough seed was wasted to seed the ground, and, as the field was only lightly cultivated in the spring for barley, the seed was never urned up until ploughed for wheat. I not advise trusting to such chance eding as this. Better sow the field as mal, and let the volunteer clover come as extra to give the soil a closer mat d a heavier growth. The farmer who we clover seed for a few years will find profitable far beyond the money value

Mr. Editor: Having read in your paper reports of the remarkable cures of satarth, I am induced to tell "what I know about catarth," and I fancy the "snuff," and "inhaling-tabe" makers (mere dollar grabbers) would be glad if they could emblazon a similar cure in the papers. For 26 years I suffered with catarth. The masal passages became completely closed. "Snuff," "dust," "ashes," "inhaling-tubes," and "sticks," wouldn't work, though at intervals I would sniff up the so-called catarrh snuff until I became a valuable tester for such medicines. I gradually grew worse, and no medicines. I gradually grew worse, and no one can know how much I suffered or what a of a kerosene lamp took place in a tenement for clover.

There can be no doubt that this system of mixed farming is more profitable, not only in the money value of crops sold, but vastly more so in the fertility of the soil. There is greater certainty, also, for the farmer. He does not have all his eggs in one basket, and a bad season does not leave him with receipts running far behind his inevitable expenses. The weather that is bad for one crop is favorable for others, and he has always a reasonable certainty of having something to sell. Of late years shrewd farmers have leaved to the struggle.

Regular Secretion Essential to Health.

The regular secretion and flow of the gastric juices, and of the bile which the use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters promotes, are effects which conduce materially to the restoration which conduce materially to the restoration of health, when the system is disordered. Food is not digested in the dyspeptic stomach because the gastric fluid is delicient, superabundant or vitiated; the liver becomes congested and the bowels constipated because the supply of bile is inadequate or misdirected. The Bitters rectifies all this, and removes every ill-consequence of two samplings and svery ill-consequence of non-assimilation and billous irregularity. Futhermore, it stimulates the action of the kidneys, by which impurities are, so to speak, strained from the blood, and any tendency in the urinary organs to grow singgish and disordered is counteracted. Whether it be used as a means of regulating gastric or billions secretion, and relieving the overleaded towels as to represent the constraints. ing the overloaded towels, or to promote complete, and therefore healthful urnation, complete, and therefore healthful ur.manon, Hostetter's Bitters may be relied upon with confidence to accomplish the end in view.
