The Korest Republican.

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY, BY

W R. DUNN. OFFICE IN BOBINSON & BONNER'S BUILDING ELM STREET, TIONESTA, PA.

TERMS, $2.00 A YEAR. No Subscriptions received for a shorter Correspondence solicited from all parts of the country. No notice will be taken of anonymous communications.

The Forest Republican.

VOL. X. NO. 44.

TIONESTA, PA., FEB. 6, 1878.

$2 PER ANNUM.

" . one year - - 10 80

one month - - 3 00 three months - 6 00 Two Squares, one year - Quarter Col.

Rates of Advertising

Legal notices at established rates. Marriage and death notices, gratis, All bills for yearly advertisements col-lected quarterly. Temporary advertise-ments must be paid for in advance. Job work, Cash on Delivery.

Lost Treasures.

BY ELSEABETH AKERS.

If some bind power, when our youth is ended, And life's first freehness lost in languid

Should stay awhile the doom by Fate intended, And grant as generously one precious boon-Saying, "With thwartings, bitterness and trial.

Your tollsome days thus far have been oppressed; Choose now some blessing, fearing ro denial,

To light, and charm, and beautify the rest"-What should we ask? the prize of young ambition?

Fame, power, wealth, and gifts of priceless Ah, no our souls would utter the petition :

"Give us ob, only give us back our lost!" No visioned bliss, no pleasure new and splen-

No lofty joy by longing never crossed, No new delight undreamed of, heaven-descended. Only our own-the tressures we have lost! For, wearied out with strife, and glare and

Grown wiser with our years, and clearer-

No more beguiled by dreams, nor charmed by

We dread the new, and prize the known, the Ab, what a crowd of joys would gather round

Could we but have our vanished back again The heart unspoiled, the strength and hope which crowned us, The bounteous life, the ignorance of pain-

The innocense, the ready faith in others The sweet spontaneous earnestness and truth.

The trust of friends, the tender eyes of mothers, And all the rich inheritance of youth-

The plans for noble lives, that earth thereafter Might be more pure; the touch of love's warm lia And saving hand; the sound of childish laughter,

The peace of home, the joy of comradeship-We had them all; and now that they have left

We count them carefully, and see their worth, And feel that time and fortune have bereft us Of all the best and dearest things on earth. Ah, yes! when on our heads the years are pressing: And all our flower-plats are touched with frost,

We ask no more some new untasted blessing-But only sigh, "Ob, give us back our lost :

More Than Her Match.

Long sha'ts of moonlight were shooting down through what seemed an almost inpenstrable wood and quivering on the green mosses. A faint wind dallied with the foliage. Wild flowers flecked the ground.

Here, in this sylvan retreat sat Miss Barron, and she was very much out of humor, for every now and then she drove the point of her parasol into the un-offending mosses. She looked and was downright disgusted with everything and everybody. The belle of three seasons, during which she had escaped heart-whole, she was now "caught," and all because of a three weeks' sojourn at a country villa.

Madge had never been off her guard fashionable watering places; but this year she had come to a quieter place, and had met Lindhurst Barrington. She did not yet know, however, she was in thralldom.

She only knew she was cross and lonesome; and so she sat punching the little blossoms and pouting. She thought Barrington exceedingly companionable, and that the other four gentlemen stop-ping at the villa were little better than wooden men. As for downright, earnest love, why her intentions for three years had been never to yenture her heart at sea, but only to glide about the shore, flirting, safe to disembark any time. Yet she was now thinking of Lindhurst Barrington in a way many would have termed love. But she would not admit this to herself. He was a delightful summer friend, that was all, she said. She liked summer, and flowers, and birds, and hazy atmospheres, and a quiet flirtation; but when these went, saw the train sweeping out of the stathe coming season brought new enjoy-ments and fresh flirtations, and Barrington could go with them. Were there not others, pray, who could read Tennyson and sing tenor? But now, just this moment, it was rather lonesome. If he only would come!

He had gone to town the morning previous, promising to return in the evening. She had walked with him through this wood-path, on his way to "Madge!" and a serious look came the station. He had lingered a moment into his face. "Let us drop bickering, at the stile beyond, to tell her how bean-tiful she looked—how the fresh morning air had brightened the color on her lieve the point at which you left off was

"Come this evening as far as here to meet me," he had said, "won't you? The path will be a horrid labyrinth with-

"You will surely return?" she had asked. "If you don't, I shall find every tree a hobgoblin when I go back "Return, indeed! I shall think of nothing else, I shall do nothing all day but pull out my watch to see if it is time way, thought a moment, bounded over the stile, and hastened down the path, turning often to look back at the pretty picture she made, listlessly leaning on the stile, with a tinge of regret in her face. At a turn where she would soon had meant to play the injured mistress be hid from sight he had dared to wave for several days, and make him abject in Madge was now waiting according to appointment, and she had taken care to coct a most ravishing toilet.

But all her little preparations were wasted. Lyndhurst Barrington did not come, Still she waited. It seemed so unreasonable, so cruel, to disappoint her. Perhaps he was only trying to tease her, had got out unseen, and would surprise her directly by his ap-

A doleful sough of wind, coming from the dark recesses of the wood, a sudden shutting-down of night, made Miss Barron feel something like fear; and she started nervously to return. As it grew darker her dread became terror; she fancied strange noises were about 1 did not know you; but in that time all fancied strange noises were about 1 did not know you; but in that time all my life now seems to be a seem to be a s fancied strange noises were about; her feet scarcely touched the ground; she skimmed on, fluttering at heart like no need of asking for vows, they would some low-flying bird belated from its night, as she brushed out her hair, never to forgive Mr. Barrington? What wonder that a harmless little bunch of violets which he had gathered for her the day previous and which she had treasured in a vase on her dressing-case, she now found faded, disagreeable and odorless, and that she tossed them pettishly out into the darkness from her window?

"I detest him and his violets," she cried. "He may stop in town till doomsday, for aught I care."

Miss Barron did not sleep well and rose in the morning with a little dull weight on her feelings, "Perhaps," she thought, "he will not come even to-

As she dressed for breakfast he was constantly in her mind.

"Perhaps he did it on purpose," she said. "Perhaps he didn't, but lost the traih. But he had no business to lose the train," she added crossly. "Perhaps he was ill; perhaps some women had asked him to remain. Well, if so, I don't care," she said. "He shall see I am happy enough, and not even piqued, when he comes."

Still, as the day wore on, Madge found the ladies of the company provoking and the gentlemen more uninteresting than ever. Mechanically, towards evening, she donned the same toilet as on the uight previous, and took a circuitous route through the garden, that none might be cognizant of her movements. Emerging out of sight, she struck straight | course, she was not going into any prosy again listening for the rear of the train, notwithstanding all her angry vows of the night before.

Beautiful, cross, unreasonable girl!
"I will not go to the stile;" she was saying to herself, "and that will be a disappointment to him."

She was somewhat unsettled, however, for fear she might be in just the same predicament as on the previous evening. and have to return through the gloon wood alone. She had seven-eighths of a mind to go straight back, even yet. But she remainded after all, so perverse is

At last, with a sudden screech, the engine came steaming along. Miss her once, a shadow of a thought passed Barron began to trace figures on the through her mind that perhaps he was ground with her parasol, and put on a most unexpectant air, her teatures sink- about in this way by a string. ing into a repose and unconcern benign enough to befit a saint.

She saw Lyndhurst Barrington deseend from the train and come striding on joyously till he came in eight of the had never been off her guard stile; for, though bidden herself, she Hitherto she had visited could observe all his movements. He came on eagerly, looking to the right and left for her, and almost stumbled over Miss Barron. "Oh, Madge!" he cried, as he threw himself at her feet, "you did forgive me, and have come to meet me !" "Forgive you, Mr. Barrington?" Nothing could be more icy cold. "Pray, what has been your fault?" She looked, as she spoke, straight before her, but with an air of surprise which was exceedingly well counterfeited.

He looked up eagerly into her face as he answered, "Why, I was buttonholed to death in town yesterday. It seemed as if a conspiracy had been entered into. and that every fellow I knew had left his summer haunt to go up to town to detain me. I transacted but half of my business, and put off the Longley with only a nod on my was to the station. I was getting maddening. suppose he'll never speak to me again, After all, I was one minute too late. I tion just as I reached it. I was in dispair, thinking you would come to meet

"I did walk down last evening, but I can hardly say, sir, that I came to meet you. I did not expect you. I thought, if business or illness kept you, you might be gone a week. I never thought of you as hobnobbing with your male friends and sauntering to the station."

whistling, and I was doing nothing in particular, so if you will strike off a stave of anything, I will demurely, but admiringly, walk by your side."
"Madge!" he exclaimed excitedly.

"I did no such thing. Do men gaze at statuary or paintings and whistle? Faith, my last remembrance is of a prettier picture than an art-room ever held, I saw a beautiful woman, looking regret at my leaving-a woman I want for my

Here was a poser! Proposed to! It tactics. Were weeks of delightful flirting to be cut off in a moment in this fashion? How could be have believed her in earnest? It was ridiculous, She had meant to play the injured mistress his efforts to reinstate himself with her. She did not want a climax reached with this man. Her heart had told her that it would leave a regret which she had never known before. To avoid this now, she would begin with raillery.

"Really, Mr. Barrington," she said,
"you must be hungry or over-tired, to make such a statement. A well-spread table, steaming viands, comfort and a wife, must have shot through your brain. I can assure you a delightful supper now

"Miss Barron," be began, frowning, wanted it to be as if we had loved for-

"Very well," she said, "let it be so; no vows, no commencement. You see I agree with you perfectly."

"No, I will not have it so, he cried trying to take her hand.

"As you please," she laughed, shrug-ging her shoulders, "I can pick my way through this bog without help." "I hope I am not wanting in gentle behavior, but before I or you stir a step further," he said, stepping in front of her and barring the way, "I want a simple answer to a simple question— plain 'yes' or 'no." Do you love me, Madge?"

"If I cannot say 'yes,' perhaps I cannot say 'no.' I think friendship does not justify an abrupt 'no.' I—"

"I don't want equivocation," he broke in. "If you loved, eyes, lips, voice, acts, all would blend into 'yes.' It must be 'yes' or 'no,' I say. Madge had never met any man so mas terful. But she answered, nevertheless, "Then, 'no,' since you force me to be unladylike,"

"I do not ask you to be unladylike.
I do not say you are. I asked you for your love. It was a straightforward question, I wanted a straightforward answer. My arm, Miss Barron." And thus walking, assisting her over every trifling inequality of ground, they went on to the villa. Miss Barron was exceedingly gay that evening. Lyndhurst loved her! Of self in by marriage. But they could live the delightful life they had lived this last three weeks always. He had nothing in particular to do. Why could he not, when they should return to Lon-don, visit her every day? She could, she thought, flirt all the same, when he was not by; and his attentions, therefore, would be just so much gained. Her life was not to be altered an iota. She did not profess to love the man. He must not, hewever, scatter his attentions. He must concentrate all his admiration on her.

But toward the close of the evening, when Madge found he had note sought not a poodle-dog, after all, to be led

She had sung, thinking to bring him taken a garden stroll with a rival, Mr. care. Oakley, and Lyndhurst had carelessly drawn up his outstretched legs, as he sat lazily on the veranda steps, to let them pass down, without other notice of their presence. He had, she elecided, fairly ill treated her, a lady, and she would tolerate rudeness. She would not teach him what was due to her. ...

But days passed. A week wore on. She found no possible chance to visit her anger on him. He never joined He was always civil and wellbred, but that was all. She was downright perplexed. She scarcely ever met him, even at table, much less of an evening. He went fishing by sunrise, rode on horseback half the day, and at night asked the gentlemen up to his chamber; the ladies, sitting lonely in the parlor, heard

One evening Madge curled herself up on a sofa and looked at the matter seriously. She must outgeneral him. But how? She had tried hauteur, and it had aignally failed. Now she would try a dash of "giving in," even though it hurt her so to do. She would plant herself on the old footing.

Just then Lyndhurst stepped into the room, cautiously at first, as if fearing her presence. She immediately rose to meet him. He did not start, but looked her over from head to foot without a word. She gayly said:

"Don't you think your highness is overdoing things a trifle?" Then she lost control of herself, and showed her vexation. "Sing to me," she cried, " walk with me, talk to me, do anything to obliterate this doeful week."

"Well, Miss Barron," he answered coolly, "suppose we talk and walk. I'll say, under the stars, what I said under the oaks; and you shall give me a true answer.

She looked at him a moment, then fairly blazed. "I never saw such persistence, Thank Heaven! I go home to-morrow, where gentlemen know what is due to a lady, and take 'no' for 'no without getting sullen. Good night, Mr. Then he caught her hand in a quick came like a sweet surprise, nevertheless. Barrington; and good-by. If you ever no squabblings.

But it was contrary to Miss Barron's consent to be less boorish, persistent, I shall be pleased to see you in town."

He watched her out of the room and then sat down to the piano. Miss Barron's first impulse was to seek out the party on the lawn; but, some-how, every face on earth, but one, seem-ed tame. Then she resolved to go into

"I would play," she said pettishly, "if that pig-headed masculine was not the library and read; but books were monopolizing the piano. Just at this point she burst into tears. Crying, usually, to Miss Barren, consisted of a couple of tears mopped up by bit of lace. She had never before thrown herself down, in such limp shape and got into such a thorough tempest of weeping, as now. She was an honr at it. Gradually she got calmer; she sat up, and began to consider what was next

She tried to think of going home as a pleasure soon at hand, Home! What had she there? Only an old aunt, who dozed in a lace cap, with a cup of choco-late at her elbow half the time. The memory of the pleasant days spent here would drive her wild, in that gloomy house. Then she acknowledged that it would be terrible snywhere without-

She jumped to her feet.
"He will drive me wild," she said,
"banging in that way on the piano."
"She passed into the hall and looked into the drawing-room, where he sat placidly playing. "Poor fellow!" she thought, "how can I call it obstinacy; it looks like misery written all over his features. And isn't he superb-looking? Why, no one else has ever approached him; and he will be mine if I say it."

Suddenly—can you comprehend it? she walked straight into the parlor and stole up behind him, put her arms about his neck and pressed her cheeks against

Not a word was said for some moments; but his fingers fell from the keys, his arms dropped listlessly at his sides, his head sunk lower and lower on his breast, and Madge felt a mist gathering in her eyes, a mist of happy tears.
"Come out under the stars," she whispere l. "I want to say 'yes' to

"I am answered, Madge," he said, drawing one of her hands over his shoulder and talking with it against his lips. "Let us not mar this moment of surprise and joy by a single word."

"Lyndhurst, you are provoking as ever. When I would not, I must; now I will, I shall not. I shall have to practice bumility, I see, and study my lord's long enough, and I insist on saying 'yes' in my own way. There, now, if you don't want to speak again in an hour I will rest my face here and dream."

"I don't think you will find me a tyraut," he said, kissing her. "But come out, Madge, and let's compare our mutual miseries during the past week. He led her through the open window, holding back the swaying vines for her to pass. There, arm and arm, under the stars, let us leave them.

Buffalo Bulls Protecting a Calf.

The buffalo cow seems to have little maternal instinct, differing in this respect greatly from the domestic cow. When frightened, a buffalo cow will abandon her calf, and running away, leave it to be protected by the bulls, who, to her side, but he had lounged away— to their honor, seldom forsake their a thing he had nover done before— charge. An army surgeon once saw an when she was at the piano. She had, admirable illustration of this maternal

One evening, as he was returning from a day's hunt, his attention was attracted by the curious behavior of six or eight buffaloes. Approaching them he saw that they were all bulls. They stood in a close circle with their head downward. At some twelve or fifteen paces distant sat, in an eccentric circle, a dozen large gray wolves, licking their chops, as if impatiently waiting for

In a few minutes the circle of bulls broke up, but keeping in a compact body, walked off toward the main herd half a mile off. To his amazement, the doctor saw in the centre of the guardian bulls a little feeble calf, newly-born, and hardly able to walk. After going a hundred paces, the calf lay down, and the bulls again formed a protecting circle about it. The wolves, who had followed on each side, sat down and licked their

The doctor did not wait to see the end, it being late and the fort distant; but he had no doubt the bulls brought the calf, abandoned by its mother, safely to the herd.

An African Conveyance.

The British consul at Loanda (Augolia) gives an account, in his report this year, of the maxilla carriers of that city, or "the cabmen." as he calls them, desiring, probably, to cherish any recolcabmen, however, in being at no expense for horses. The maxilla is a sort of cane-bottomed sofa without legs, is suspended from a bamboo pole, has a gayly painted waterproof top, and is covered in with curtains of fancy print to keep out dust and ward off the sun's rays. Two men carry the pole on their shoulders, and this is the only means of conveyance about the town. The tariff ought to be satisfactory to the hirer. If engaged by the hour each carrier has a sum not quite equal to three pence. Residents generally engage the carriers by the month at nine shillings, with three pence a day ration money. The fare is established by law, and there are

CRASHING THROUGH A BRIDGE.

Railroad Train in Connecticut, Breaking Through a Bridge-Many Killed and Hartford, Conn., by which over thirteen persons were killed and fifty wounded, is described as follows: The special which left Hartford at nine o'clock P. M., had two heavy engines and eleven cars, containing about six hundred pass-engers. It passed through Tariffville at ten o'clock, and two minutes later a terrific crash was heard in the direction of the Farmington river. But one explanation was probable—the train had gone through the bridge. White-faced men, hurrying back into the town a few minutes later, announced the catastrophe and aroused the citizens to hasten to the rescue. "Both engines and four cars filled with passengers are in the river," they cried, "and strong and willing arms are wanted." The news was telegraphed to Hartford and Winsted, with calls for wrecking trains and surgical aid, and the people hastily dressed and hurried in the piercingly cold wind to the bridge.

The entire western span was a wreck, together with four passenger cars, the other seven remaining safe upon the other span. The leading engine was upside down upon the river bank; its companion upon its side, half buried in shattered beams and twisted iron work. The baggage car (which had been occupied by passengers) was a dismantled wreck, and having broken through the ice had nearly filled with water. Next to it was the first passenger car, also sunk and shattered to pieces, while the second and third rested their forward ends against it with bodies tilted to a sharp angle and the rear ends resting against the center pier. The remaining cars, striking against these, had kept upon the track. The passengers in the second and third cars had been tossed rudely together in the lower ends, snd, bruised and jammed by their fellows, were struggling to gain the open air, fearing the firing of the cars from lamps and stoves. Another and a greater danger presented itself to the occupants of the first passenger and baggage cars, which, sinking to the bottom of the river gradually, let in a flood of icy water waist deep. Assistance arrived none too soon. The passengers were rescued, many uninjured, more badly bruised or cut. From the torn front of the first passenger car, and through the broken roof of the baggage-car, one after another was taken out, many of them wet through and suffering intensely in the wind, the thermometer being far below the freezing point. These unfortunates were wrapped in overcoats stripped from the shoulders of their rescners and carried to the uninjured cars. The wounded, numbering thirty or more, were taken to the same comfortable quarters, drawn upon rade sleighs devised for the occasion. Two hours of hard work sufficed for search was begun for the dead, report- few days. ed in the excitement of the moment to be fifty or more, for it did not seem possible that many of the occupants of the baggage and first passenger cars could have escaped. Yet these appre-hensions, happily, were ill-founded. The corpses found were placed in a car, and the train was then pushed into the village, car by car, by the men at the work. Medical attendance was obtained, the people of Tariffille threw open their houses to the sufferers, and soon afterwards relief trains arrived from Hartford and Winsted with physicians and men to help the villagers. After the badly wounded had received attention, the excursionists resumed their homeward journey via Hartford, Plainville and the Canal road to its junction with the Connecticut Western line, beyond the broken bridge.

About Bells.

The origin of bells is probably to be dated from the time when the sonorous writings of Moses as being attached to Aarou's robe, in order that "his sound shall be heard when he goeth in unto the holy place before the Lord." Bells are also mentioned in Zech. xiv. 20: "In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses Holiness unto the Lord;" and it has been suggested that even Tubal Cain, the sixth in descent from Adam, "and instructor of every artificer in brass and iron," might have known something of the art of making them. The Greek warriors are said to have had small bells concealed within the hollow of their shields, and when the captains went their rounds of the camp at night each soldier was required to ring his bell in order to show that he was awake and watchful at his post.

The period when large bells were first introduced in churches is uncertain, but by the seventh century they were in pretty general use, since the venerable Bede at that time mentions lection of home. They differ from the them as being in English churches. cabmen, however, in being at no expense Authorities differ as to who was the first to thus introduce them-some claiming it to have been Paulinus, Bishop of Nola, in Campania, Italy, A. D. 400; others, Pope Sabinianus A. D. 604. Bells were first known in France about the year 550, and pretty generally introduced in churches 1030. The same authority claims the first set of bells (chime) was p in Croyland Abbey, Lincolnshire, ing the reign of Edmund the Fire, A. D. 945. It is not definitely known

Items of Interest.

"I'm getting fat," as the thief said

The country population of California is only equal to the population of San

The mayor of Jackson, Miss., gives tramps situations on the chain gang cleaning the streets.

'Twas ever thus from chi'dhood's hour We've seen our fondest hopes decay— The fire went out, the batter's sour— We can't have buckwheat cakes to-day.

The figure of Liberty was first introduced on dimes and half dimes in 1836, but the circle of stars did not appear till

A man in Ohio is having a house hewn out of solid rock, the material being cut away so as to leave the walls, roof and floor all of the one piece. Captain James B. Eades is the most secessful dentist in the business. has received half a million dollars for clearing the mouth of the Mississippi. Last year a Chicago dealer failed, among his assets being $600 worth of

The marshal kept watch over the estate till it melted away and then brought in a bill for $674 for doing so. There is some foundation for the vampire legends after all. Crooks, an English engineer, while surveying the Isthmus of Darien, had his blood sucked during sleep by a vampire bat, and died from the consequent exhaustion. In a store at Mendota, Ill., a town of six thousand inhabitants, there met by accident the other day six men over six feet four inches high, the average height being within a hardly appreciable fraction of six feet five and the average weight

It is noted that probably the oldest settler in California is Peter Storm, who arrived in the Golden State in '33. He was the maker of the famous "bear flag" of Sonoma, when 1864, the citi-zens of that place declared that California should be an independent State.

A man was recently convicted in outhern Germany of murdering one of family and attempting to poison four others. The judge naturally thought that such a heinous crime should be punished with more than usual severity, and so sentenced the murderer to death and fifteen years' imprisonment. Mr. Marshall, the first discoverer of gold in California, still lives in Coloma, in that State. In this place he made his great discovery thirty years ago, and has remained there ever since. He made a fortune in mining, but has spent nearly all of it, and is now a comfortable culti-

"I'll bet I make him break in a week," said a Troy (N. Y.) youth when a com-panion, urged by his betrothed, took the pledge at a public temperance meeting. The effort was successful, and when the young man came to his senses he was so much mortified that he went upon a the saving of all who were living. Then spree which ended with his death in a > LAUGHTER. Laughter! 'tis the po'r man's plaster, Covering up each and disaster. Laughing, he f rge's bis troubles. Which, though real, seem tut bubbles Laughter! 'tis a seal of nature Stamped upon the human creature, Laughter, whe her loud or mute, Tells the human kind from brute. Laughter its Hope's I ving voice Bidding us to make our choice, and to call from thorny bowers, Leaving the ras and taking flowers.

Captain Langiners, of the Danish vessel Lutterfeld, communicates to a Copenhagen paper an interesting se-count of a novel experience which co-curred on December 10, 1876, while on s voyage to Valparaiso. The vessel was at this time in the neighborhood of Terra del Fuego, about 140 miles from Magellan's straits, when early in the morning it narrowly escaped collision with an island where no trace of land appeared on the charts. The vessel hove to until daylight, when the capproceeded with a boat's crew to the new property of metals was first noticed. island, which had gradually diminished "Bells of gold" are mentioned in the in size since the first observation. island, which had gradually diminished Around the conicul rocky mass the water was hissing, and although no smoke appeared, it was found to be too highly heated to permit of landing. The sinking continued slowly, until at eight o'clock fhe island was completely submerged, and an hour later the vessel passed over the spot where it had disappeared. This volcauie island is probably due to the same causes which have produced the recent severe earthquakes on the west coast of South America.

Injuriousness of High-Heeled Shoes.

Dr. Carbally says: "In descending stairs or deep declivities while wearing high-heeled shoes, which throws the weight of the body upon the front part of the foot, the extra effort made for the purpose of retaining the body within the centre of gravity produces a direct strain upon these tendons, causing rup-ture or stretching of the annular ligs-ment sufficient to allow them to be displaced. It is no wonder, then, that fashionable women waddle in a most ungraceful manner when they attempt to walk. They destroy their comfort to follow a ridiculous fashion, and acquire an ambling and undignified movement. People do things to follow fashion that their good sense would cause them to be ashamed of under any other circumstances. Ladies wearing such shoes are often obliged for safety, to go down stairs backward; and they can be see every day descending the steps of when bells were first manufactured in America; but it is believed that a making pretence of talking founder by the name of Hanks was the pioneer in this branch of industry, his foundry being located in Connecticut.