An Early Butterfly. Foolish little butterfly, You have come too soon ! Yes, you should have waited Till the sunny June : Or have waited, any way, Till the pleasant month of May.

You will freeze your toes off. You will freeze your nose ; You should have come, at any rate, In your winter clothes. You will surely freeze and die, Little silly butterfly !

Something About Bees.

Perhaps you don't like bees. That's because you are afraid of them, and probably have been stung. But you must remember that, after all, the stinging was your own fault, for no doubt you troubled the bees in some way, and their sting is the only thing they have with which to protect their precious store of honey and wax. You remember what we said about that sting the other day that it was so small that you couldn't see it even with a magnifying glass that made the point of a needle appear to be Terser a quarter of an inch broad ! and yet how that sting can hurt !

Every swarm of bees contained in these little bee houses that many of you who live in the country, have seen so often, is composed of three different kinds—the queen, the workers, and the drones. The queen is not the only fe-male in the swarm, but she is the only perfect female. All the worker-bees Every swarm of bees contained in perfect female. All the worker-bees are females, but not perfect ones, and the drones, who never do any work at all, = are the males, Tiveling room in a line with the course of the boiler, were taken from the course of the boiler in its terrific flight. George Gerrity was taken from the ruins of the engine-room fatal-iv injured. The two-story building containing the engine was completely demolished, and the five-story main building, in which one hundred nervong were at work was considerable dot

How busy the workers are! They gather all the honey and bee glue, feed the young and keep the hives clean, and after the close of the honey season they kill off all the drones.

With the exception of the queen, all the bees in a hive die in about nine months, so every winter finds new bees in the swarm. The queen lays from 1,000 to 3,000 eggs a day, and a hive sometimes contains 20,000 bees.

There is a very funny thing about these eggs, and that is that, while all of them are alike when they are laid, the workers feed the maggots with different kinds of food to make the different kinds of bee-the drones, workers and queens. The queen deposits eggs first for the workers, and then for the drones and queens. The queen has a sting which she never uses, except in fighting with other queen bees. After the bees have been hard at work all day they go to bed by clinging to each other by the feet, thus making long chains hung from the top of the hive. One bee fastens himself to the ceiling, and the next one clings with its fore-feet to the hind-feet of the one above, and so on, until hundreds are fastened together. We shouldn't think that the top bee who has to hold all this string would call it much of a rest.

The bees, beside knowing a great many other things, know enough to go into the house when it rains. If a cloud comes up in the west, they fly away home as fast as their wings will carry them.

Let us see how the workers make this bee-bread with which the young bees are fed. The worker starts out on her travels and comes to a big flower and flies into it. When she comes out she is covered from head to tail with pollen, which sticks to her legs and the hairs over her body. She takes her fort nai flies into it. When she comes out she over her body. She takes her first pair be practicable at the time fixed by law, but of legs and dusts, herself off, and passes th's dust to the middle pair and from them to her hind legs. With the last pair of legs she works the pollen into little bits of balls. This she does before going home, and sometimes she gets so heavily laden that when she reaches the hive she has to call other bees to help her unload into a pollen cell. Then the bee works over the pellets until they become a soft paste, and then it is in a condition to give to the little bees larve. When the larvæ gets so big with eating as to fill its cell, the workers don't feed it any more, but cover the mouth of the cell with wax. Then the larve, who is a prisoner, begins to cover the inside of its cell with silk, which it spins just as the silk worm does.

. What Kills.

In the school, as in the world, far more rust out than wear out. Study is most tedious and wearisome to those who study least. Drones always have the toughest time. Grumblers make poor scholars, and their lessons are uniformly "hard" and "too long." The time and thought expended in shirking would be ample to master their tasks. Sloth, gormandizing and worry kill their thou-sands, where overstudy harms one. The curse of heaven rests on laziness and. Is the the table of table of the table of the table of tabl gluttony. Fretting, fidgeting, ennui and anxiety are among the most common causes of disease. On the other hand, high aspiration and enthusiasm help digestion and respiration, and send an increased supply of vital energy to all parts of the body. Courage and work invigorate the whole system, and lift one into a purer atmosphere, above the reach of contagion. The lazy groan most over their "arduous duties," while earnest workers talk little about the exhausting labors of their profession. Of all creatures, the sloth would seem to be the most worried and worn.

Then wonderful changes take place in the chrysalis, and by and by out comes the perfect bee.

Let us see how they build their cells, Thomas says:

"They generally begin at the top or roof of their chamber and build downward, at first working irregularly, and, as it were, pasting over the surface, and building horizontal cells of a more perfect form. These at length become so numerous that they extend downward in the form of a vertical wall, other con-geries (a collection of several bodies in one mass) of cells are formed in succession, until the whole comb assumes the form of a series of perpendicular plates or partitions. Each plate consists of a double set of cells, the bottoms of which are applied to each other, and form the partition between each set. The cells are not always of the same size, but a sufficient number of a given depth are reserved for receiving eggs, and which are necessarily adapted to the size of the future maggot; the smaller or shallower cells are those in which the honey is stored.

The breeding and store cells are placed horizontally, but the mouth of the cell is sometimes a little raised, the better to retain the honey. The interspace between the vertical combs is genscally about half an inch; these streets, as they may be termed, in this city of industry, being just wide enough to al-low two bees busied upon the opposite cells to pass without incommoding each other. In addition to these interspaces the combs are perforated in various places, so as to allow a passage for the ness from one street to another, thus eaving them much time."

Don't you call that wonderful? But we find so many other things of interest that it will be impossible to tell all about them this time. There are the swarmings, the wild bees, the gathering of the honey-bags, which some of the wild bees build from the branches of trees in great masses four feet long. At some other meeting of the club we will talk over all these matters. - N. Y. Tribune.

Jewels of the Crown were locked in a box, that box in another, and so on, until they were sup-posed to be burglar proof. They were then locked up in the vault of the castle, there to remain for one bundred years, the keys being placed in a mortar and fired into the sea. Scarce fifty years passed by, and the modern lock-picker opens the vault and boxes without trouble. So the science of medicine, when studiet with the aid of chemistry and the mi-croscope, becomes plain and simple, and one croscope, becomes plain and simple, and dis-eases that were regarded incurable a generaeases that were regarded incurable a genera-tion ago, now readily yield to remedies employ-ed by the modern and progressive physician. A d cade of years since, and women were taught to believe that their peculiar diseases and weaknesses were incurable; but now hun-dreds a d thousands of once bedridden women in the United States will testify to the fact that D. P. erce's Favorite Prescription has effected their perfect and permanent cure.
