The Effect of More Greenbacks.

The Hon. John Sherman took charge of the Treasury Department at a period of great commercial and industrial depression that has continued to the present time, and the severity of which has been in proportion to the speculation, extravagance, waste, and debt incident to an overissue of paper money. To carry on the huge operations of the war a larger amount of paper money became necessary than the usual business of the country required. As was foreseen and predicted in 1861, this paper depreciated in value, and the depreciation was shown in the rise of prices of all commodities—goods, lands, rents, and wages. Relatively these things were worth no more than before, but seemingly they were; and, as the prices advanced, people felt they were growing rich. In fact, they were growing poor. The money issued to conduct the war was used to buy material, which the war destroyed, and to pay soldiers, whose time and energies added nothing to the wealth of the country; consequently the money used to carry on the war represented, when the war was over, the loss in production which the war had created. Money, instead of being the evidence of wealth, as gold is, was the evidence of debt, and represented loss instead of gain, as money ordinarily is supposed to.

The first effect of the suspension of specie payment was the depreciation of paper, or, as it appeared, a rise in prices. As prices continued to rise, it took more to transact the business of the country, and this necessitated further issues from time to time to meet the demand; and as each issue caused increased depreciation, the process of inflation went on continually, and so debts rapidly augmented, under the guise of riches. It was a fascinating illusion, which has ended in disappointment and disaster. It was a fiction, and the nature of things could not continue. We must, in the long run, live on realities, and voting to keep the delusion by keeping up the inflation which caused the delusion does not answer. The expansion of the currency tended to an explosion all the time, and the explosion could not be avoided. As the day of reckoning came round to one and then another, the signs of unsoundness were disclosed, and failures and panic ensued. Of course there came a clamor for specie, and the insolvents all said if they could only get accommodation for that, if they could keep on borrowing—they need not fail. The difficulty was that they could not longer borrow. Debt beyond ability to pay had absorbed their substance, and not being able to put up security, their own notes would not bring the money. The bubble being blown to the last degree of tension, at length burst, and the enormous amount of indebtedness to be liquidated made hard times. To return to specie payment is therefore only another name for getting back from delusion to reality. We can no longer force our books and make eighty cents pass for one dollar. We can no longer imagine that we have $1,000, when in truth there are but $800 in our vaults.

"I Must Lie Down and Die." The following is an extract from a letter dated July 21, 1877, to the discoverer of Bethesda Water. The writer is the Rev. T. B. Fuller, D. D., D. C. L., Rector of St. Gregory's Church, Toronto, Archdeacon of Niagara, etc., etc. The writer, at the age of 60 years was a victim of Saccharine Diabetes. His physician said (to use Dr. Fuller's words) "he could do no more for me than he had done; that my disease was incurable, and that I must lie down and die." [We should state here, en passant, that our townsman, Joseph Fleming, Esq., is the sole and only authorized agent for this wonderful water for this State, as well as for Ohio and West Virginia.] To return to Dr. Fuller: "In four days," he writes, "after taking the Water, I obtained relief, and since that time I have taken no medicine, consulted no medical man, and presume, if I could give myself reasonable rest, I would be quite well."

Such testimony, from such a source, should indeed have convincing weight. Sole agent for Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia. JOSEPH FLEMING, 84 Market street, Pittsburgh, Pa. Send for Pamphlets and Certificates, mailed free. Price—per gallon, 50c; per one-fourth barrel, $1.00; half barrel, $5.00; barrels, $16.00.

Consumption Cured. An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure for consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive, and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send, free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, with full directions for preparing and using, in German, French, or English.
