The Derrick gives the following particulars of the sickening affair: "Precisely at 1:45 the Sheriff severed the rope that held the drop upon which Tracy was standing, and he fell with an awful thud. The knot had not been tied perfectly and the weight of the body caused it to slip out, and the prisoner fell through the drop striking the stone floor, a distance of seven feet. Something like a groan went up from the spectators at this unexpected horrible accident. Tracy struck on his feet, but in a second, his arms and legs being tied, toppled over on his head and struck the hard wall, relapsing into insensibility. The sheriff and the attendants rushed up, caught him and raised him to his feet. Recovering his senses, Tracy exclaimed, "I forgive all my enemies," continuing to repeat the litany of his religion. While adjusting the rope a second time he fainted again, and was the means used. This time the neck was broken by the fall, the only indication of feeling being the slight contraction of the limbs. A hole was drilled through the top of the safe, back of the second doors, into which powder had been poured and touched off with fuse, some pieces of which were found in the room. From the appearance of things a considerable charge must have been used, as the doors were so badly bulged as to make it impossible to turn the combination, and the inside of the first doors were considerably blackened and marred by the burnt powder as it oozed out of the crevices.

Up to this writing Mr. Kelly has been unable to open the doors, and cannot tell what damage has been done on the inside. Of course the money and valuables are all right, being deposited in the back part of the safe, which is secured by a burglarproof box and locks, and it is evident the thieves did not get the second doors open so as to reach this box. Had they been successful in getting the second doors open, their work would have only begun, as it would be impossible to effect an entrance to

The thieves probably left their work unfinished on account of the approach of day, as they no doubt were late getting commenced, several citizens having been in the vicinity as late as 11 o'clock, who saw or heard nothing unusual.
